U. S. May Yield Japan Nominal Naval Equality

Weighs British Proposal Offering a 'Parity in Principle.'

'Face Saver' Seen Pleasing to Nippon

Conversations Brighten as Roosevelt and Hull Get Report.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

London, Nov. 15.—The United States is considering a naval limitation proposal which would recognize Japan's nominal naval equality, it was learned tonight.

The changed attitude of the American delegates, it was said, followed a strong appeal to them by Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary.

Sir John was declared to have made his appeal to the American representatives in the preliminary naval conversations—Norman Davis and Admiral Hugh Standley—at yesterday's conference between the British and Americans.

Granting of even nominal equality to Japan, naval experts asserted, would signify an important veering in American policy.

A Decision Necessary.

In response to Sir John's appeal, it was said, Davis replied that the United States delegation was not authorized to discuss anything except continuation of the existing naval treaty limitations, possibly with minor technical modifications.

The American delegates, however, reported on the matter to Washington, and their report, it was said, "probably leaves the Government of the United States confronted with making a decision on the delicate matter of Japanese naval equality."

The American delegates' message was reported to have been cabled to President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull today.

According to the new British naval proposal, recognition of Japan's theoretical naval equality would be accompanied by a gentleman's agreement, under terms of which each power would proclaim the limit to which its naval establishment would be expanded during the next five years.

Less Than Parity.

Although the proposed declarations regarding building intentions would be unilateral, the contents of the negotiations undoubtedly would be the object of negotiation, and, according to the Anglo-American viewpoint, the entire scheme would be practicable only if Japan voluntarily accepted less than parity with England and America.

The latest information regarding Foreign Minister Hirota's instructions to Ambassador Matsudaira and Admiral Yamamoto here was said to indicate that Japan is ready to discuss the British compromise project.

These developments gave a brighter outlook to the conversations, which heretofore have appeared headed for a breakdown.

Japan, it was pointed out, is ready to consider the new proposal and may accept it as a face-saving device, while the American delegation, by agreeing to refer it to Washington, has indicated that it is not impossible of acceptance.

The possibility that the United States might construct strong air bases in Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, north of Japan in the Pa-

Spurt in Sales Cheers Wall St.

1,554,230 Share Day Is Largest Since July 17; Market Spotty.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—The broadest market for stocks since last July cheered Wall Street today. Gains on the whole were modest, but signs of a revival in speculation impressed brokers.

Volume on the stock exchange expanded to 1,554,230 shares, the largest since July 17. For weeks before election day trading had averaged only 500,000 or 600,000 shares daily.

The market was spotty. A number of issues made gains of $1 to $3 a share. A brisk forenoon advance, however, was not fully maintained and gains were pared before the close.

Buying went mainly into steel, motor accessory, tobacco and various specialties enjoying speculative favor, evidently in the belief business was headed for some improvement.

Capital continued to flow toward the dollar in foreign exchange dealings and the position of the French franc indicated the likelihood of further shipments of gold to New York from Paris.

United States Government bonds moved forward for moderate gains. The performance of Treasury issues encouraged demand for high-grade corporate issues. The bond market generally held to a narrow course.

'Uncle' Santa Bringing U. S. A Real Xmas

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Christmas this year will be the happiest in five years for American business men as well as for the public, with $500,000,000 more to spend this year than last, business leaders informed Secretary of Commerce Roper yesterday.

Christmas cheer permeated reports of officials that farmers and city dwellers alike had more money in their pockets and greater Christmas Club funds coming due. More Government funds and increased pay rolls were responsible.

Merchants were hopeful that in the gift lines the increase would amount to as high as 40 per cent over last year, they told Roper. In stable commodities the increase was expected to be less.

The reasons for their optimism were reflected in the following official and unofficial statistics for October:

1. Farmers' cash income increased $108,000,000 over last year to $662,000,000.
2. The Government distributed

Hauptmann's Defense Seeks Lindbergh Aid

To Put Flier and Colonel Schwarzkopf on Stand as Its Witnesses.

Flemington, N. J., Nov. 15 (AP). Hopeful of disapproving the State's contention that the kidnaping and slaying of the Lindbergh baby was the work of one man, counsel for Richard Bruno Hauptmann announced today they will subpena Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, father of the child, as a defense witness at the trial.

Lloyd Fisher, associate defense counsel, said Lindbergh, prior to the hoax trial of John Hughes Curtis, Norfolk, (Va.) shipbuilder, had expressed the opinion the kidnap-slaying was the work of a gang.

Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, superintendent of New Jersey State police, also will be called for the defense, Fisher said, and if Betty Gow, the Lindbergh nurse, is in the United States when the trial opens January 2, she also will be subpenaed.

Schwarzkopf Statement.

Fisher said Schwarzkopf made a statement after the arrest of Curtis that he believed the shipbuilder knew nothing of the kidnaping, but simply was deceiving the Lindberghs. Fisher was counsel for Curtis. He said today that he had understood the prosecution was planning to show in June, 1932, that Curtis brought about a hoax and nothing else, but that it suddenly switched its stand and charged Curtis had obstructed justice in the investigation.

Before the trial of Curtis, Fisher said, he subpenaed the records of the State's police investigation, but found the reported statement by Schwarzkopf was not in them.

He recalled today that as defense counsel in the trial he had served subpenas on Betty Gow and Col. Lindbergh, but subsequently saw no need to call them as witnesses.

If the State were correct or justified then in assuming a gang, and not one man, kidnaped and slew

Federal Body Orders Probe Of A. T. & T.

Data Collected Now May Be Used in Later Rate Inquiry.

(Associated Press.)

A broad investigation of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which has a virtual monopoly in the telephone field, was ordered yesterday by the Communications Commission as part of the general inquiry to determine whether additional Federal communications regulation is needed.

Rates were excluded from the study authorized yesterday. The commission indicated, however, that the data on the financial structure of A. T. & T. and its contracts and relationships with other companies would be background for a future inquiry into the charges to the ordinary telephone subscriber.

A resolution for a comprehensive investigation of the giant telephone concern was introduced last session by Senator Dill (Democrat), Washington. He did not press it after the legislation authorizing the Federal Communications Commission passed.

Duties of Commission.

Administration leaders said the commission was set up to study the field of telephone, radio and telegraph, and to report to Congress with recommendations as to what should be done. An inquiry into telegraph companies, similar to that ordered for A. T. & T. and independent telephone units, already is under way at the commission.

The order yesterday said, apparently as an afterthought, that the independent telephone companies under commission supervision would be investigated after the A. T. & T. inquiry had been completed.

Representative Rayburn, chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, said last session that A. T. & T., or its subsidiaries, does 95 per cent of the telephone business, and that all the independents are not subject to Federal jurisdiction, since some do an intrastate business.

Date of Hearings.

Public hearings on the telephone inquiry, commission officials said, will not begin until after January 1, 1935. Members of the commission staff will start work within a few days.

Among specific subjects to be scrutinized are the corporate history and financial structure of A. T. & T., in existence approximately half a century; its connections and relationships with the associated Bell companies and other subsidiaries; the license and service contracts between A. T. & T. and associated concerns and relationships with Western Electric Co., Inc., including contracts with Western Electric.

Some of Complaints.

During discussion of the communications measure in Congress, Rayburn said complaints of excessive depreciation write-offs and excessive charges had been made against both the telephone and telegraph companies and that the average per capita revenue for the telephone companies was $8.41 for each man, woman and child in the United States.

The 1933 report of A. T. & T. said that 13,163,000 telephones were in use at the end of the year. Assets were reported at $4,907,000,000.

For many years, A. T. & T. common stock earned $9 a share annually, but officials have reported that some of this dividend was paid out of surplus during depression years.

British Legion Branch Scorns Term 'Comrade'

Bicester, England, Nov. 15 (AP). The Bicester branch of the British Legion today resolved to substitute the word "gentlemen" for "comrades" in speeches at legion gatherings.

The resolution said that "comrade" was more fittingly used by "long-haired people of wild, cranky ideas, than by real Englishmen."

Claim to $25,000,000 Fortune Made for Libby Holman Baby

Winston-Salem, N. C., Nov. 15 (AP). Libby Holman Reynolds' baby son, Christopher, today laid claim to the entire $25,000,000 slice of the Reynolds tobacco fortune which was held in trust for his father, Smith Reynolds.

Acting as "next friend" of the infant Christopher, who was born six months after his father's death from a pistol wound at Reynolda, the family estate here, on July 6, 1932, R. C. Vaughn filed an interplea in the pending litigation over distribution of the trust fund. He asked that Christopher be declared the sole beneficiary and devisee.

The interplea asked that the court uphold the agreement whereby Mrs. Anne Cannon Reynolds-Smith, first wife of Smith Reynolds, accepted a $1,000,000 trust fund and waived any further claim upon the Reynolds millions on behalf of herself or her child, Anne Cannon Reynolds 2d.

This agreement was made when she and the child's father were divorced shortly before he married Libby Holman, Broadway "torch" singer.

Now pending is a motion of the Cabarrus Bank & Trust Co. to set aside the $1,000,000 settlement that Smith Reynolds made on his first wife and her baby. As coguardian of the child, the bank contends Mrs. Anne Cannon Reynolds-Smith had no right to wave her child's claims to a larger share of the fortune as she did when she accepted the $1,000,000.

In filing his interplea on behalf of Christopher, Vaughn pleaded this agreement made by Mrs. Anne Cannon Reynolds-Smith was a bar to any further claim on the fortune by Baby Anne.

At the request of counsel for Vaughn, Judge P. A. McElroy postponed indefinitely a hearing set for tomorrow on the Cabarrus Bank & Trust Co.'s motion.

Fight Over Cat Brings Death To Policeman

W. M. Adrian Accidentally Shot as He Seizes Gun From Hunter.

A young hunting dog that responds only to the firing of a gun, and an altercation over a cat yesterday led to the accidental death of William M. Adrian, 37, private in the Metropolitan Police Department, at his father's home in Ashburn, Va.

Adrian died from a self-inflicted shotgun wound in his abdomen, according to Dr. W. C. Barr, of Ashburn, attending physician. He was said to have snatched the gun from A. D. Neale, teacher at the Ashburn High School, during an altercation over a cat belonging to his father, Robert Adrian.

The policeman, who lived at 323 Kentucky avenue southeast, was visiting his father. Neale was returning from a hunting trip at the time and had just fired a shot into the air, according to witnesses, to call his young hunting dog, which had started chasing Adrian's cat. Neale said the dog is trained to respond to the gun discharge.

Adrian, upon hearing the shot, rushed at Neale and accused him of firing at the cat, witnesses said. As the quarrel developed, the policeman took the gun from Neale's hands and raised it as if to strike him with the butt when the barrel was discharged into his stomach, authorities were told.

Adrian's father and a youth, Junior Ball, employed on the farm, witnessed the accident. Neale was not held, but an inquest was scheduled for 9 a. m. today in Dr. Barr's office.

On learning of the accident, Inspector Edwards ordered the flags over all precinct stations at half-staff until after the funeral.

The Washington policeman, who was on two-weeks' leave, was killed instantly. He was a patrol driver assigned to the Second Precinct and had served 12 years in the Police Department. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary Howe Adrian, and a son, William Ross, 2.

Maine Sheriff Taken In Alleged Rum Plot

Portland, Me., Nov. 15 (U.P.).—A deputy sheriff and a State trooper were arrested here today as alleged members of a rum-running ring said to be distributing millions of gallons of untaxed alcohol in Maine, Massachusetts and New York.

Harry Irish, 37, of Sebago, deupty sheriff of Cumberland County and father of 11 children, and Gerald Packard, 35, of Cumberland, State trooper and father of four children, were arrested on smuggling and conspiracy charges by Federal Agent Henry P. Weaver.

Spain Captures Three After Battle at Sea

Huelva, Spain, Nov. 15 (AP).—A running gun battle between the Spanish coast guard cutter Jarana and a Portuguese sailing vessel ended today with the capture of three men wanted for participation in the recent Spanish revolt.

The three men—Crescencino Bilbao and Juan Tirado, Socialist deputies in Congress, and Rafael Jurado, president of the municipal board of Huelva—were brought here to be imprisoned.

Board Scans Wider Scope Of Social Aid

Old Age Pensions and Other Benefits Are Being Studied.

By Robert C. Albright.

Undeterred by limitations widely read into a White House statement on social legislation, the President's Committee on Economic Security yesterday proceeded with studies toward a comprehensive program of social planning for consideration by Congress.

Researches will not be confined to unemployment insurance, the only phase of the program specifically pledged by the President, it was authoritatively stated. Old-age pensions, work benefits, aid to the dependent young and even health benefits will be encompassed in long-range planning, as originally intended.

How much of this program will be offered for passage next session remained up to the committee and the President himself.

Both Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins and Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins were quick to deny that Mr. Roosevelt's viewpoint precludes any action beyond unemployment insurance.

Limited Program Seen.

Nevertheless, among many social service experts attending conferences here, the opinion persisted that the scope of the program will be limited so far as the coming session of Congress is concerned. Recovery objectives, and the heavy tax burden of a broad program enacted all at one time, are being weighed by the Cabinet committee.

The White House was silent, but spokesmen insisted the President has an open mind on all of the proposals under consideration and is waiting for his committee to advise him.

"I think they are likely to bring in a real program that can be enacted into law by Congress if it so desires," Secretary Perkins said.

Conferences Continue.

Meantime parallel conferences were continued by three economic security advisory groups separately interested in old-age pensions, medical benefits and unemployment insurance, while broader phases were discussed by the President's advisory council and Cabinet committee at all-day sessions.

Methods of administering unemployment insurance are being considered by one group, which is getting down to facts and figures.

Whether contributions should be made wholly by employers or by workers and employers alike, is one problem. The amount of benefits, whether they should be $10, $20 or $30 a week, is another. In the end the committees will be guided by actuaries on details. Broad outlines probably will take the Federal-State cooperative tangent proposed by the President.

Secretary Perkins suggested that a work plan may be integrated with unemployment insurance. If unemployment relief is kept on a strict insurance basis, an impasse may be reached in times of depression, she pointed out. Administrator Hopkins is working on a plan under which work benefits might

Postal Surplus Is $12,000,000

Result Is Best Since Record of Burleson in Wilson Regime.

The Postoffice Department's surplus for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934, was $12,161,415.03. This amount, representing the first department surplus since 1919, is greater than for any fiscal year in the history of the postal service, with the exception of 1918, achieved during the term of Postmaster General Burleson, under President Wilson.

The surplus was reported by Postmaster General James A. Farley in a letter sent to President Roosevelt, just prior to the President's departure on his Southern trip.

The figure, a net total after authorized adjustments for certain subventions and free mailing charges, is about $7,000,000 greater than the preaudited figure of $5,000,000 which Postmaster General Farley announced last July, while the President was in Hawaii.

Mr. Farley called attention to the fact that the surplus accumulated during the first full year of this Administration exceeds the aggregate amount of the surpluses for all years prior to the Wilson Administration. His letter added: "For the first time in 15 years the taxpayers have been relieved of the necessity of making good a postal deficit."

The recent increases in postal revenues, with October of this year showing an 11 per cent increase over October, 1933, are indicative of a substantial improvement in general business conditions throughout the country, according to Mr. Farley. He added that, with constant improvements in the service, there is now less criticism of the postal department than at any time since he took office.

Sen. Vandenberg Asks Republicans to Form A New Deal 'Coalition'

Plea Made Contingent on Farley Ouster From One Job.

Nonpartisan View Held Best Policy

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Abandonment of Republican partisan opposition to the New Deal in favor of a "virtual coalition" government, in which every proposal of President Roosevelt would be confronted on its inherent merits, was projected yesterday by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, one of his party's hopes for the Presidency in 1936.

As the price for such an attitude by the Republicans, Senator Vandenberg demanded, in effect, the ousting of James A. Farley as either Postmaster General or chairman of the Democratic National Committee. He unleased a sharp attack on Farley, asserting he holds "absolutely incompatible positions."

Returning to the city after his reelection to the Senate, Senator Vandenberg emphatically, and in his usual square-jaw fashion, outlined an attitude which brought him into conflict with the Old Guard leaders of the Republicans, National Committee Chairman Henry P. Fletcher and Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee.

Opposition Favored.

Following the Democratic landslide of last week, they contended that the mission of the Republican Party is to continue unrelenting opposition to the New Deal. They would have their party become a militant, though small, minority dedicated to defeat "the policies and practices of the Administration."

Whether the Republicans on Capitol Hill should fight against every proposal coming from the Democratic regime or should discriminate, supporting some measures and opposing others, represents a fundamental cleavage in the party which was obvious throughout the last 18 months.

Affiliated in previous years with the Republican "Young Turks," rather than the "Old Guard" or the "Progressives," Senator Vandenberg placed himself on the side of those who would be discriminating in their opposition, and he was quick to assert that Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, was acceptable to him as Republican leader in the Senate. The latter has been criticized by some of the "Old Guard" for lacking militancy in his opposition to New Deal proposals.

Senator Vandenberg envisioned a Republican Party tightening its

MISS JOSEPHINE ROCHE, appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury yesterday by President Roosevelt.

Another colorful figure with a veteran career as a fighter for social rights yesterday became a part of the New Deal when Miss Josephine Roche, Colorado coal mine owner, was named an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of the public health service and employe welfare.

Variously described as "stunning," "middle-aged" and a "demure little woman," Miss Roche at the age of 46 becomes the first woman member of the Roosevelt "little cabinet" after a score of years spent in social service work, labor prob-

Chest Nearing Its Half-Way Mark in Drive

Gains 45.30 Pct. of Goal in 4 Days; Teams Shun 'Complacence.'

Community Chest coffers last night held cash and pledges totaling $759,047.98 as the fourth day of the ten-day drive for $1,675,000 ended. This means that 45.30 per cent of the goal has been reached through the efforts of the more than 5,000 volunteer workers who form the collecting machine.

The sum reported at the luncheon at the Willard Hotel was $156,287.98—a slight slackening in pace when compared with previous days. For the fourth consecutive day the Government unit, led by Maj. Gen. Frederick W. Coleman, raised the largest amount, $68,785.00. This unit, with 62.33 per cent of its quota, is entrenched in first position.

Praise for the work of the Governmental unit was given by the luncheon speaker, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury L. W. Robert, who predicted tomorrow's report would show the Treasury over its quota.

Gen. Coleman reported 40 Governmental divisions were added to the 104 which previously were reported beyond their quota.

Pressing the Governmental unit was the Special Gifts unit, headed by Charles Carroll Morgan. This group, which goes out for large gifts from firms and wealthy in-

President Off On Trip to See TVA Project

He Is Given Farewell by Throng; Will Honor Pioneers Today.

By Leon Dure, Jr.
(Post Staff Writer).

Aboard Presidenial Special Train, Nov. 15.—President Roosevelt was speeding southward tonight to the teeming Valley of the Tennessee.

For three days, accompanied by a half-dozen Congressional companions, TVA experts and a swarm of local dignitaries, he will go over this vast proving ground for the social-economic experiments he envisages for the whole Nation.

Leaving Washington this afternoon, the Chief Executive prepared for a strenuous itinerary that will focus National attention on the gigantic dams and power lines, the projects in reforestation and soil building, that typify the New Deal in its first and foremost struggle with nature.

A crowd of several hundred was on hand to see the President off at Union Station. Mr. Roosevelt stood on the rear platform, posing for pictures, with Secretary of State Hull and Secretary of Commerce Roper. Despite the chill, the President wore no overcoat.

First stop on a program that calls for numerous Presidential appearance, before throngs of Southerners, will be made at Harrodsburg, Ky., an outpost of Colonial America, at 9 a. m. tomorrow. From

Chief of Staff's Tour Extended

White House Order Keeps MacArthur on Job to Dec. 15 at Least.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur will continue as chief of staff of the Army until December 15 under an executive order forwarded yesterday from the White House to Secretary Dern at the War Department.

MacArthur's regular four-year tour of duty expires next Tuesday. He has been recommended for reappointment by Secretary Dern who is anxious that the young chief of staff remain and push further his plan of reorganization for the Nation's military forces.

Due to the pressure of other matters, principally relief, President Roosevelt has not been able to give attention to the selection of the new chief. Observers consider it about an even bet that he will retain MacArthur who developed the G. H. Q. Air Force and the Four Army Plan of military organization and who has pushed the modernization and mechanization plan with the help of PWA funds.

Best Dressed Transients 'Hired' For a Day, But It's Mystery

Clothes may not make the man, but listen to what happened to 32 of the District Transient Bureau's best dressers yesterday.

They got jobs. They "worked" for two hours and were paid $1 apiece. Most of them were taken to work in taxicabs on which the fares had been prepaid. And some of them stand a pretty good chance of "working" again today at double wages, all because their shirts are clean, their trousers neatly pressed.

It happens that the Nation's dress manufacturers are having a hearing before their NRA code administrators to decide what, if anything, is to be done to stop some of their people from making $4.75 dresses that look like $25 ones.

The hearing is being held in the Washington Hotel. That's where the 32 well dressed men from the Transient Bureau "worked." They attended the hearing.

What the code administrators would like to know is, for whom were the 32 working?

The people who make $4.75 dresses look like Park avenue models said they represent 85 per cent of the industry. The original Park avenue designers said it wasn't so.

All the Transient Bureau men know is that a well dressed man came down there and asked for 30 or 40 of their snappiest dressers. He said he'd pay 50 cents an hour, with transportation thrown in.

Bureau officials rounded the men up, put them in taxicabs and told them to go to the rose room in the Washington Hotel. There they sat for two hours before going back to the bureau, where an official gave them their money.

What the dress manufacturers would like to know is who's idea this was, anyway. Most of the seats were taken when the bureau men got to the meeting.

Federal Drive Against Code Chiselers Seen

Cummings Names Special Aid to Prosecute NRA Violators.

A drive against code chiselers probably will result from appointment yesterday by Attorney General Cummings of a special assistant to prosecute NRA violators.

Cummings said his new aid, G. Stanleigh Arnold, of San Francisco, would maintain offices both at NRA and the Justice Department to expedite court action against pact offenders. He will take charge Thursday.

Indications were Arnold will be instructed to take the profit out of chiseling by speeding prosecution. President Roosevelt recently commented he hoped to correct a situation under which chiselers often were unmolested for six months or more and thus found it to their advantage financially to violate codes.

Arnold's appointment was believed to mean the Administration had definitely abandoned earlier plans to transfer all compliance authority from NRA to the Justice Department. His appearance also was expected to result in removal of the possibility that Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, University of Chicago president, would be named to coordinate Blue Eagle enforcement.

The new compliance setup may include machinery to encourage industry to police its own codes. Officials are known to feel such a system would make for better enforcement and would reduce the number of potential court prosecutions.

Cummings predicted Arnold would press for a prompt Supreme Court test of an Alabama case involving alleged violation of lumber code wage and hour provisions. The defendant, W. E. Belcher, won in the trial court.

Kendall Heads AdvisoryGroup

Boston Manufacturer Is Elected to Commerce Department Post.

H. P. Kendall, Boston manufacturer, was elected yesterday as chairman of the Commerce Department business advisory and planning council.

He succeeds S. Clay Williams, who resigned because all of his time was required in his new post as chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board. The council adopted resolutions praising Williams on his accomplishments.

Walter C. Teagle, president of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, was chosen as council first vice chairman, succeeding Kendall. New members named to the executive committee included Gerard Swope, New York; Ernest G. Graper, New York; Harold C. Smith, Chicago, and W. J. Vereen, Moultrie, Ga.

Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the board, Chase National Bank, was elected to the council.

The council delayed action on a report by Dr. T. N. Beckman, of the Census Bureau, prepared for its small industries committee. The report demanded greater loans to small business by both private and public agencies.

Dogs Doomed

Will Ends Their Lives, and Gives Parrots to Zoo.

Directions that her pet dogs be chlorformed, that her parrots be given to the Washington Zoo, and that she be buried beside her "beloved mother-in-law," were found in the will of Mrs. Mollie J. Smith, filed for probate in the District Supreme Court yesterday.

Mrs. Smith, who lived at 621 Fourth street northwest, left all of her $28,000 estate to her husband, Ulysses S. Smith. Attorney Godfrey L. Munter, representing the estate, said Mrs. Smith died October 30. Her will was dated June 5, 1924.

Mrs. Smith failed to explain why she wished to end the lives of her dogs. Inquiry at the Smith home revealed four dogs had been killed several days ago.

Life Terms for Two Who Killed Dentist

Fergus Falls, Minn., Nov. 15 (AP).—Robert Palmquist and Palmer Swenson were sentenced to life terms in prison today on their pleas of guilty to the murder of Dr. John Schacht, dentist.

Dr. Schacht was robbed and slain near here the night of September 4, after he had gone for an automobile ride with two men. Authorities said Swenson confessed wielding a hammer with which Dr. Schacht was killed.

Thomas H. MacDonald, Washington, chief of the Federal Bureau of Public Roads, and C. B. Treadway, Tallahassee, chairman of the Florida Highway Commission, were elected to five-year terms on the executive committee.

Between You and Me

Fog Shrouds Social Security Program as Well as Government Relief Question.

By Raymond Clapper

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S address on social security has kicked up a storm.

It appeared to commit him against action in the near future on old age pensions, but his intimate advisers said yesterday that this was an unwarranted interpretation. The speech was prepared for him—the report about Washington was that Miss Frances Perkins wrote it—and it is not taken as representing the President's final views.

Whoever prepared it failed, apparently, to relate the social security program realistically to the present unemployment situation.

For instance, the President stressed unemployment insurance as the first need. Some of his advisers argue that unemployment insurance is the least urgent measure of social security. It does not touch the man now out of a job, who is the most pressing problem. It concerns only the men with jobs, and who are safe for the moment. All agree that unemployment insurance should come, but not at the expense of other measures.

Mr. Roosevelt appeared to relegate old-age pensions to the background. This will not happen without a serious attempt to persuade him otherwise. Old age pensions would, as some of his advisers see it, offer relief to a percentage of the unemployed who are likely always to be unemployed. In this sense it is viewed by some in the Administration as an organized substitute for the present form of relief. They are not content to see it deferred in favor of unemployment insurance.

Mr. Roosevelt made the point, however, that adequate old age insurance, when financed by taxation, is so costly that a "means test" is necessary. That would mean practically that one must take a pauper's oath to avail himself of it.

* * * *

Heavy fog surrounds not only the social security program, but the relief question as well.

The reason is that President Roosevelt has been caught in a swirl of conflicting advice and has not been able to make his decision. He probably will not make it until after another battle among his advisers at Warm Springs during the next few weeks.

Numerous circumstances contribute to the confusion. The main difficulty is that two of Mr. Roosevelt's hardest hitting advisers are far apart in their ideas as to what should be done.

Secretary of Interior Ickes, as Public Works Administrator, is driving hard for another heavy dose of public works expenditure. Harry Hopkins, Federal Relief Administrator, wants to concentrate first on simple relief. Around the conflicting ideas of these two men, both strong-jawed scrappers, both ardent New Dealers, but with different approaches to the present problem, is being waged the real undercover struggle to determine the Administration's course.

It is understandable that each feels as he does.

Hopkins has 18,000,000 on relief sitting in his lap. His problem, as he sees it, is to feed and clothe them as economically as possible. To him this means distributing relief funds, not building huge dams, roads and other great works for the incidental employment involved. Some work relief, yes. But he foresees that Congress may become restive over continued heavy appropriations and that millions diverted to public works may cut into relief funds.

Ickes on the other hand, believes that unemployment can not be reduced merely by providing relief but that the Government must go far beyond this and push money into public construction work until industry's wheels, thus artificially turned, catch up power of their own. The pressing problem, as he see it, is to provide employment which will remove the necessity for relief, he says, in an article in the magazine Today, that relelef is a palliative and can not in itself induce recovery. At most, he feels, it stimulates only consumer goods industries. To awaken heavy industries, he believes, the Government must provide funds for construction of bridges, railroad improvements, schools, sewers, low-priced housing and slum clearance. He has no faith in automatic recovery.

* * * *

FERA experts are studying various forms of relief—straight out cash dole, Government wholesale purchases in huge quantities, manufacture of relief commodities by persons on relief, and other variations to ascertain which method would provide the most relief for the fewest Federal dollars. It does not necessarily follow that the method cheapest in dollars will be recommended by Hopkins because consideration must be given to other factors, such as the effect on the morale of the unemployed, and the effect of relief manufacture on private industry.

* * * *

What policy the President will adopt nobody knows. He is prejudiced against straight relief and prefers public works on general principles. His new governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Marriner Eccles, takes the same view. Hopkins is not against all public works, but he believes there is danger of swinging too far in that direction, and neglecting the immediate human problem.

* * * *

Is Prof. Ray Moley censoring Secretary Ickes, or was it just a mechanical mix-up? Ickes wrote an article in the current issue of Moley's magazine arguing for PWA as against the dole.

In the original manuscript Ickes spoke favorably of a proposal for a four-lane transcontinental highway, avoiding all cities, with no grade crossings, over a 1,000-foot right of way landscaped to make it the most beautiful road in the world.

All reference to this was stricken out of the article as it finally appeared.

Incidentally Ickes, who has been labeled America's greatest spender, prefers to refer to himself as "an old Scot." If his clan ever finds out he is spending three billion dollars he will be thrown out.

Department of Agriculture officials recently drew papers for another Government corporation to be chartered in Delaware. Everything was set, and all that remained was to get the final approval from President Roosevelt.

He turned it down on the ground that the public is becoming prejudiced against alphabetical agencies. He suggested that instead of organizing a corporation, the department set up a committee of its own officials.

Don't think the Administration doesn't know its mass psychology.

She aspired to be a "New Deal" Democratic Governor of Colorado during the summer but was defeated after a warm battle in the primary by the incumbent, Gov. Edwin C. Johnson. She was mentioned last spring as a possible successor to Miss Grace Abbott as director of the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department.

Other Changes.

In making the announcement of Miss Roche's appointment, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau revealed that other administrative duties will be assgined to Assistant Secretary L. W. Robert, jr., who now has jurisdiction over the Public Health Service. Some months ago jurisdiction over the Federal building program was taken away from Mr. Robert and now he has under his direction only the Bureau of Engraving and the Bureau of the Mint.

Since Mr. Morgenthau entered the Treasury a year ago, he has made a sweeping reorganization of the duties of his assistants. Fiscal duties handled by former Assistant Secretary Thomas Hewes, whom Miss Roche succeeds, were transferred to the Undersecretary and Mr. Hewes was left without any work until he resigned.

In addition to supervision of the Public Health Service—an adjunct of the Treasury—Miss Roche will serve as Secretary Morgenthau's representative in problems connected with the welfare of Treasury employes, numbering 56,000, of whom 15,000 are in Washington. She will make studies of their working conditions and "will consider problems that may be revealed in connection with the welfare of employes individually and collectively," the Secretary explained.

An Ex-Policewoman.

Although Miss Roche is the first woman to be appointed by the Roosevelt Administration to the "little Cabinet"—a term applied to the assistant and undersecretaries of the major departments—the New Deal has recognized women by giving them a place in the Cabinet, a ministerial post in the foreign service and the directorship of the mint, as well as a score of other important posts.

Born in Nebraska, where her pioneer father established the first bank in the State west of Omaha, Miss Roche turned to social work while a student at the fashionable Vassar College. Later her social conscience was aroused by the killing of miners during a labor dispute in Colorado's bloody coal fields 20 years ago and she turned to labor problems. At this time her father had become a mine owner.

Later Miss Roche worked with Florence Kelly, famed labor leader, and spent three years as editorial director of the Children's Bureau in the Labor Department here. She also was in charge of the foreign language information service. At one time she was a policewoman in Denver, working under Judge Ben Lindsey in the Denver Juvenile Court.

Headed Union Mines.

When she inherited control of the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co. from her father in 1927 Miss Roche's first step was to agree to a union contract. Her mines were the only unionized mines in Colorado. Her action not only averted a strike at the time, but ever since relations between the workers and mine managers have been happy.

She also has razed the old shacks in which her miners lived and had erected in their place modern houses. In 1931 when competing mines started to reduce wages she decided to maintain her pay rates and union labor in Colorado came to her aid with the slogan "Buy Josephine's Coal."

"You know it is just stupid to shoot people when you might just as well recognize their rights," she observed several months ago. "The trouble now is that too many in the larger industrial groups are refusing to consider labor rights in matters that mean life and death to their workmen."

Kemmerer Hits Fear-Inspiring 'Radical Laws'

Business Confidence Low, He Says; Editor Backs the Government.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—A noted economist warned the Government to reassure business, while a prominent editor urged business to get behind the Government, at the annual banquet of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York tonight.

Dr. Edwin W. Kemmerer, Walker professor of international finance at Princeton University, said:

"It is imperative that the policy in Washington should be one that will inspire the confidence of our best-grade, forward-looking business executives, the men upon whose initiative alone we can depend for an enduring recovery. To this end the first requirement is the maintenance of confidence in our currency."

Behind the President.

Henry J. Haskell, editor of the Kansas City Star, said:

"The country demonstrated in the election that it is overwhelmingly behind the President. It is up to business to accept the situation and make its plans in accordance with the evident conditions. * * * We are looking for business to come out of hiding and go forward."

Haskell attributed the farm depression to loss of foreign markets, the industrial collapse and the fixed burden of debt and taxes. He praised the work of Government credit agencies in aiding the farmer, but he questioned whether a Washington board could manage a farmer's land better than the farmer.

Dr. Kemmerer showed the velocity at which bank deposits circulate was the lowest in August and September since records began in 1919.

Calls Confidence Low.

"The velocities are low," he said, "primarily because business confidence is low, and business confidence is low because the majority of our business executives * * * are afraid to go ahead.

"We have money and circulating bank credit in circulation and available for cerculation in superabundance * * * but they are not moving, and the reason they are not moving is fear—fear of the results of the numerous, complicated and uncertain radical laws recently placed upon our statute books, fear of the enormous arbitrary powers entrusted by Congress to the Executive * * *.

"If these fears were allayed, confidence would be restored, because fundamental economic conditions in this country are becoming increasingly favorable for recovery. * * *

"Unless confidence is soon restored, the results will be continually rising Government expenditures, financed progressively by borrowing from the banks on the security of the Government debt, with the utilmate result of a break of public confidence in our currency and a serious flight from the dollar."

Restoration of confidence to business, he said, would save the country from such inflation.

Chavez Declares He Is U. S. Senator

Will Not Admit Defeat by Cutting.

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Nov. 15. (AP).—Representative Dennis Chavez (Democrat) asserted that he had been elected United States Senator for the six-year term from New Mexico over his Republican opponent, Senator Bronson Cutting, and added "the battle for right has just begun."

Asked whether he plans to contest the apparent election of Senator Cutting, who, on the face of unofficial returns from the November 6 election, is leading by 1,183 votes, Mr. Chavez said:

"It is a difficult task to win against $40,000,000 in any game, particularly when it is being played behind the mask of political virtue. I have been elected, and do not intend to have that election taken away from me."

NRA Code Finds There's No Luck In Horse Shoes

In the midst of its efforts to solve the industrial problems of this machine age, NRA now has to do something about horse shoes, the Associated Press says.

Increasing imports of horse shoes from Germany and the Netherlands, representatives of the American industry complained, threatened to render ineffective the code for the horse shoe and allied products manufacturing industry.

Upon recommendation of the Recovery Board, President Roosevelt may order an investigation of the situation by the Tariff Commission.

Stock Buyers Hear Warning Of Swindlers

Chairman Kennedy Fixes Rules for 'Relentless War' on Frauds.

Boston, Nov. 15 (AP).—America was warned today by Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy of the Federal Securities Exchange Commission, not to be a "sucker."

He laid down rules for a "relentless war" against stock swindlers in an address to the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

Specific reassurance to business was offered by Kennedy, who explained changes the commission will make, but at the same time he denied categorically many of the criticisms directed at the securities act.

Investors Warned.

He stressed that honest business has nothing to fear, but pledged a finish fight against stock swindlers and warned would-be investors in this fashion:

"Each and every one of you is a prospective or actual member of the sucker list, and when the stranger calls you on the phone to interest you in the purchase of securities, beware.

"Unless you have confidence in the integrity of the sponsors you ought to take special precautions before you sign on the dotted line or surrender your cash or the securities you now own.

"Over the country, from time to time, springs up the promoter with a worthless issue, a tipster sheet to lure you and a battery of telephone salesmen to close the deal to your misfortune.

"Be on your guard. The commission can not in the very nature of things police every transaction in America. Where it has the evidence, rest assured it will strike."

Defends Regulation.

The chairman stressed that, while millions of American people have become owners of stocks in large corporations, the fact that control of those corporations was sometimes maintained by a few persons holding only a fraction of 1 per cent of the stock had necessitated Federal supervision.

This supervision, however, "does not put the Government into business as a judge of values," but simply requires that "there must be a record in Washington of the important facts which should guide your judgment before you can be asked to invest your money in a business," he said.

"Have no fear that Government supervision will destroy honest enterprise," the chairman said, arguing that both railroads and banking entered their period of greatest prosperity after they came under Federal supervision.

Zasu Pitts Disclaims Debt.

Los Angeles, Nov. 15 (AP).—Zasu Pitts of the movies wrung her hands in court today and in hurt tones told Judge Wilbur Curtis she did not owe the $725 for which she is being sued by a nursemaid, Mrs. Lula D. Woolleson.

Jones Surveys Federal Loans To Help N.Y.C.

Delinquent Taxes Would Be Paid Under Plan, RFC Heads Says.

Federal funds may be lent to private interests in a tentative plan to bolster New York municipal finances, Jesse H. Jones, Reconstruction Finance Corporation chairman, declared yesterday.

He explained he assured A. A. Berle, jr., New York City chamberlain, he would be glad to approve such a loan if legal obstacles could be removed. The negotiations, he emphasized, remain to be completed.

"I don't think the legal obstacles are insurmountable," he said.

Jones explained the tentative plans called for organization of privately owned trust companies to accept liens in exchange for paying delinquent municipal real estate taxes. The companies would charge the property owners 6 per cent interest and agree not to foreclose for two years.

The companies would borrow from the RFC at 4 per cent interest, posting the liens and their own notes as security. Jones pointed out the distressed property owners would benefit by paying 6 per cent interest instead of 10 per cent now charged by the city.

Even if the New York plan becomes operative, Jones said he did not expect many similar loans in other cities because special State laws would be required and he believed few cities would need such help anyhow.

Investment bankers, Jones announced, have subscribed all PWA bond issues offered by the RFC. The securities, with a par value of $18,633,300, brought $19,047,683, including premiums and accrued interest.

Paris Aerial Show Features a Display Of War Technique

Paris, Nov. 15 (AP).—New means of combating warfare from the air as well as the great advances in aviation will be on display to the world tomorrow with the opening here of the fourteenth annual international aeronautical show.

France shows its preoccupation with the menace of invasion from the air by an impressive governmental exhibit of the latest advances in antiaircraft technique. Prominence is given long-range, rapid-firing cannon and extremely sensitive detectors which can "pick up" the approach of an enemy long before the hostile bomber or dirigible has come into view.

Scores of foreign companies are exhibiting new commercial and tourist planes. American aviation, however, plays an obscure part.

The United States is represented by but one manufacturer, and his share is limited to a small showing of airplane motors.

On the other hand, Russia, participating for the first time in the international show, celebrates its arrival by a large number of exhibits in all departments of Soviet air progress.

Dr. Urey Wins Nobel Award For Chemistry

'Heavy Water' Is Called Greatest Discovery in a Century.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—Dr. Harold C. Urey was awarded today the 1934 Nobel prize in chemistry for what has been called the greatest chemical discovery in a century, that of "heavy water." The young scientist, professor of chemistry at Columbia University, greeted the announcement from Stockholm with a sigh of relief.

"After all the rumors of the past few weeks," Dr. Urey said, "it's a great relief to have it settled." While he said he was "remarkably free" at Columbia for research, Dr. Urey added:

"I hope it will make possible greater research."

"Heavy water," the popular name for Dr. Urey's discovery, is made out of heavy hydrogen, or hydrogen atoms twice as heavy as the hydrogen formerly known. It was this discovery and isolation of heavy hydrogen atoms, technically called "isotypes" that won recognition for Dr. Urey at the hands of the Nobel board.

"Isotype" Is Off-weight.

An "istype" is an off-weight atom. That is, all the atoms of the 92 know chemical elements have standard weights. Mixed with many, perhaps all of them, are off-weight atoms.

Until shortly before Dr. Urey's discovery, it was almost undreamed of that there could be an off-weight atom. The standard weight of hydrogen, or "isotype" had to be 2. was only 1. Any off-weight hydrogen, or "isotope" had to be 2. Dr. Urey was able to prove mathematically, the existence of this double weight atom. Then he went at the seemingly impossible task of separating it from ordinary hydrogen.

Hydrogen Cooled to Zero.

With the aid of Dr. Brickwedde, of the United States Bureau of Standards, the separation was made. Hydrogen was cooled until near absolute zero, when it was a frozen liquid. As this hydrogen ice melted, the lighter atoms vaporized first. That left enough heavy hydrogen to prove their existence. The heavy atoms were named "deuterium."

Small fish died in "heavy water." Apparently, they suffocated. Tobacco seedlings failed to live when the soil was moistened with "heavy water." But not all the physiological effects were bad. Some yeast growths have been speeded up with this new water.

More important to the scientific world was the fact that hydrogen enters into most of the compounds that man uses and into many he hasn't yet manufactured. Heavy hydrogen makes a different substance out of every compound where it is substituted for ordinary hydrogen.

Dr. Urey's discovery gives scientists a tool for experimenting with the structure of matter such as they never had before.

Winner Will Receive About $40,000 Cash

Dr. Urey will receive a cash prize of about $40,000. The formal ceremony of presentation will be held December 12.

Dr. Urey is a native of Walkerton, Ind. He was born April 29, 1893 and was graduated from the University of Montana in 1917, teaching for several years in rural schools before matriculating.

He was associate in chemistry at Johns Hopkins from 1924 until 1929, when he went to Columbia. He attained a full professorship this year.

Former State Official Convicted as Embezzler

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 15 (AP).—Accused of causing irregularities totaling $16,364.47 in an account of the State insurance department, which he formerly headed as commissioner, Joeph I. Reece, 51, was convicted by a jury today. Punishment was fixed at from three to six years in the penitentiary and a fine of $16,364.47, the amount of the alleged irregularities.

He was convicted on two counts, one charging embezzlement by a public officer and the other fraudulent breach of trust.

Sofia, Bulgaria, Nov. 15 (AP).—Bulgaria decided today to cancel payment of all foreign debts, Premier Kimon Geogieff announced after a long cabinet meeting.

Nazi Guild Sets One Standard For All Bread

'Political Jesuitism' Hit, Japanese Religion Upheld by Haidn.

Goslar, Germany, Nov. 15 (AP).—To the national slogan, "One Reich, one people one Fuehrer," the National Nutrition Guild today added the words "One bread."

Karl Vetter, chief of the guild's grain division, explained to assembled German farmers, meeting in their second national congress under Nazi auspices, that the government not only has fixed the price of bread, but has prescribed exactly how the bread shall be made.

"Any baker desiring to bake in different fashion from the standard set must obtain special permission," Vetter said.

"Blood and Race" Upheld.

Earlier the congress heard Mathias Haidn, head of the department for the ideological uplift of farmers, scathingly attack "political esuitism" and praise the Japanese religion of "blood and race" which, he indicated, is thoroughly in accord with the Nazi concept.

Another speaker, Dr. Erich Winter, German expert on agricultural features, proposed that New York and London markets undertake to finance exchange of goods between agricultural and industrial countries, failing which, he said, those countries would work out their own bases of exchange.

How far regimentation of agriculture under the Nazi rule has proceeded was apparent from Vetter's address, in which he asserted all grain speculation had been eliminated and uniform prices fixed for flour.

Grain Feeding Forbidden.

An order has been issued to small farmers forbidding them to feed grain to cattle, he said.

"Peasants with farms of more than five hectares (approximately 12 acres) have been asked to deliver a certain amount of grain at a fixed price to the government," Vetter continued.

"That we have been able to keep the price of bread the same for more than a year in the face of scarcity is one of the outstanding achievements of the Nazi regime."

Marriage of Danish Prince And Canadian Nearing Courts

Erik, Former Lois Booth Stirred Society With 1924 Nuptials.

Copenhagen, Denmark, Nov. 15 (AP).—A marriage that stirred Canadian society ten years ago—that of Prince Erik of Denmark and Miss Lois Frances Booth of Canada—soon will end in divorce, it was indicated tonight.

Prince Erik, nephew of King Christian X, and his princess petitioned the king for permission to seek the divorce.

The prince, who renounced his rights to the throne in 1923 just before his marriage to the Canadian heiress, had been living quietly until recently at his country estate with the princess and their two children.

The former Canadian girl is staying with her mother at Bjergbygaard, an estate the princess owns. It was reported they were planning to leave for Canada.

Prince Erik an enthusiastic farmer, tried cowboy and farm life in the United States and Canada. After his marriage to Miss Booth in 1924, the couple tried farming in California, but gave it up when it proved a financial failure.

After renouncing his rights to the throne, Prince Erik, son of Prince Waldemar, King Christian's brother, received the title Count of Rosenborg, but retained the right to be addressed as "your highness."

During his travels in the United States he frequently went incognito and displayed interest in American farming methods.

His marriage to Miss Booth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Booth, took place at Ottawa February 11, 1924, and the ceremony at all Saints' Church was attended by distinguished representatives of the fashionable life of both continents.

Profit Is Seen In Federal Sales

Treasury Believed Taking Advantage of Good Market.

Treasury trading in Government securities in October resulted in net sales of $16,703,500 the Associated Press says.

Secretary Morgenthau made the announcement yesterday. It was the first time in a long period that Treasury purchases and sales over a month period had not increased rather than decreased its holding of Federal paper.

The purchases and sales are made for investment accounts. The excess of sales was believed to have been prompted by an opportunity to take a profit for some of the investment accounts.

Commenting on the Treasury's lifting of restrictions on shipments of American capital abroad, Morgenthau said:

"I don't see how anybody can draw any conclusions from those regulations as to stabilization."

"We were just running around the block and meeting ourselves coming back," Morgenthau said, explaining that all requests for exchange transactions had always been granted.

"We will get a much more detailed report on each transaction than ever before," he said.

23 Dead at Sea In Path of Gale In Philippines

20,000 Reported Homeless in a Single City on Luzon Island.

Manila, Nov. 16 (Friday) (AP).—The destructive typhoon which lashed parts of the Philippine Islands and surrounding seas yesterday resulted in the deaths of 23 men, mostly fishermen, at sea, the Manila Tribune said today.

Earlier reports showed four persons drowned, 30 missing and about 20,000 homeless, but crippled communication systems made gathering of information a slow, difficult process.

The Danish motorship Noramaersk, which sent messages saying it was in imminent danger during the storm, later reported it had reached shelter.

Naga, a provincial capital on Luzon Island, on which Manila is situated, appeared to be the worst sufferer. The 20,000 homeless report applied to Naga alone.

The first drownings reported occurred off Catabalogan, capital of Samar, an island province south of here. A fifth person was swept out to sea and his fate was not determined. Twenty-nine fishermen were reported missing from San Jose, Leyte Province.

Preparations for relief work at Naga were undertaken immediately by the Red Cross.

Provinces to the south generally appeared to have suffered the worst. Manila escaped the full force of the storm but was drenchd by heavy rain and swept by a 48-mile an hour wind.

Eighty per cent of the dwellings of Naga were reported by the railway agent there to have been blown down by the 80-mile an hour hurricane.

Red Cross Prepared For Storm Relief

Emergency relief needs in the Philippine Islands, after the hurricane which swept over the archipelago yesterday, are being met by the Red Cross, national headquarters said yesterday. The Philippine Chapter was reported fully prepared with supplies, finances and a trained personnel.

Insull Fortune Lost in Crash, Son Testifies

Utility Holdings Wiped Out in Investment Trusts, Fraud Jury Told.

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP).—Samuel Insull, jr., trained to take over his father's $2,000,000,000 public utility system, testified today that its crash carried away the entire family fortune.

"Our utility holdings went into our investment trusts and stayed there and got wiped out," young Insull told the Insull mail fraud jury as he took the stand to wind up the defense case.

Thirty-four years old, Insull held a president's chair when he was 25, and in the boom days of '29 frequently acted for his father.

Spokesman for Father.

Since the first criminal charges were brought against the elder Insull, his son has been his spokesman, and today he detailed all the transactions in the big financial trial.

His statement that he and his father believed in the strength of their companies was expected to close the defense. Motions for directed verdicts of acquittal will follow, defense attorneys said, and there will be a half day of Government testimony in rebuttal of what 11 of the 16 codefendants have said.

Closing arguments in the case, arising from the $100,000,000 collapse of Insull's Corporation Securities Co. may take four days, with the prospect that the case will go to the jury next Wednesday, after seven and one-half weeks of evidence.

Tells of Aid to Charity.

To counter Government figures on the huge salaries received by his father and himself, young Insull recited their contributions to charity. He declared, too, that business organizations smaller than the Insull system paid larger salaries to their chiefs.

"Our total salaries in 1929 aggregated $548,000," said Insull, "the total revenue of the companies which paid them was over $90,000,000." He and his father drew less pay, he said, than the two principal officers of any other company in the utility field.

"My own salaries were based on the idea that large amounts would be given to civic, charitable and similar institutions for the good of the business," he testified. He received $67,084 in 1929, he said, and made contributions of $32,774. His gifts in 1930 were $52,845 of total pay of $135,000.

G. O. P. Called To Coalition By Vandenberg

Nonpartisan Treatment of New Deal Held Best Policy.

kinship with Abraham Lincoln and standing for "social responsibility in government without socialism." He would have his party use this rule in framing its attitude toward Roosevelt measures. He declined to apply the rule to current issues such as the veterans' bonus and enlarged public works programs.

At the outset the Michigan Republican denied the Republican Party "was dead and through" as the result of the election. Citing figures of recent elections he contended that his party was no more "dead" than was the Democratic Party after the 1928 election.

He maintained that the last election demonstrated that "a powerful minority" in the country expressed itself through Republican ballots and whether it would continue to do so depended "on the policies and attitude of the Republican Party itself."

Senator Vandenberg contended that "issues of such paramount and vital concern to the American people" confront the next Congress that "it is not a good time to talk politics at all."

"There ought to be a virtual coalition government," he asserted. "We've had our political day and I am now vastly more interested in what is going to happen to the country than what happens to the Republican Party.

"I realize that under our system a coalition government in the exact sense of the term is not possible. What I mean is that every proposal projected by President Roosevelt should be confronted on its inherent merits and not on the theory that it comes from a Democratic President and therefore should be opposed by the Republicans.

"The Republican Party will not lose anything by a constructive attitude toward relief measures.

Farley Attacked.

"Since President Roosevelt himself asks for this type of nonpartisan consideration—and he is entitled to have it—the nonpartisan rule should work both ways and it can not work both ways so long as the Postmaster General and the operator of the clearing house through which all jobs are filled is the chairman of the Democratic committee.

"It becomes more and more obvious that Mr. Farley holds absolutely incompatible positions. It is no defense to say the Postoffice Department was political under Republican administrations, because two wrongs do not make a right. Furthermore, it would be a paradox to have New Deal precedence quoted from the old deal."

As a "tangible example" of the "confusion of Mr. Farley's dual functions," Senator Vandenberg cited the Democratic chairman's appeal for $500,000 to pay off the party deficit. He said the appeal was not made by the Democratic committee treasurer but by the Postmaster General.

Senator Vandenberg, citing section 208 of the United States criminal code, said he wished to "warn my Democratic friends" that they would run afoul of the law if they responded to the Farley appeal. This statute makes it unlawful for any officer or employe of the Federal Government, directly or indirectly, to solicit, receive or be in any manner concerned with receiving or soliciting any contribution for any political purpose.

He said it would be "unlawful for any officer or employe of the Federal Government to contribute one penny as long as Farley makes such an appeal and remains in his dual capacity."

He also pointed out that J. Austin Latimer, special assistant to the Postmaster General, "showed up in Detroit a week before the election to turn the sod for the new parcels post building for which plans are not yet drawn, and the first page of his mimeographed speech was devoted to a straight-out appeal for Democratic votes, with the implication that such was the only way to get the parcels post building.

"If they are willing to be that brazen," he added, "it doesn't take much imagination to believe they would go further in using Federal money and functions to influence voters."

Receiver Is Named For Country Club

Voluntary Petition Filed by Mansfield Hall.

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—G. O'Conor Goolrick, president of the Virginia State Bar Association, was appointed receiver for the Mansfield Hall Country Club by Corporation Court Judge Frederick C. Coleman yesterday.

Goolrick's appointment was made in a suit instituted by Reginald C. Vance, who holds a first lien of $25,000 against the club property. The receivership was voluntary on the part of the club, and was consented to in order that all creditors might receive equal proportions of the club's debts.

The club is expected to continue operations, Goolrick said. He said that the club, while operating at losses during its first years of existence, had broken even during the last two years and is believed to have a sound financial basis.

there, Mr. Roosevelt will swing into the Tennessee Valley itself for a personal appraisal of this laboratory venture in rural rehabilitation.

With him on the tour, which will end Sunday night at Warm Springs, Ga., the President took a weighty stack of reports and recommendations, embodying proposals for legislation at the fast-approaching session of Congress. These he will go over in the quiet and seclusion of his Georgia resort.

Will Dedicate Monument.

The Tennessee Valley development is particularly close to the President's heart, combining as it does virtually all of the New Deal. Stretching over more than 40,000 square miles, the undertaking touches seven States and affects the lives of 2,000,000 inhabitants directly, 6,000,000 more indirectly.

A prelude to his trip down the valley, the Harrodsburg visit will be brief. The President will motor with its reproduction of the wood-to Pioneer Memorial State Park, en stockade and blockhouses that sheltered white settlers 160 years ago, and there dedicate a $100,000 Government monument to the wilderness pioneers.

Five hours later the Presidential train will stop at Coal Creek, Tenn., where Mr. Roosevelt again will disembark to drive to the Norris Dam on the Clinch River.

Plans to Honor Jackson.

From Norris Dam, the President will continue by motor to Knoxville and again board his train. A slow overnight ride will take him to Nashville, where he will attend a breakfast at the Hermitage, old home of Andrew Jackson, and lay a wreath on his tomb.

Traveling again by automobile, Mr. Roosevelt will inspect Wheeler Dam and Wilson Dam, about 22 miles apart, returning to his train at Sheffield, Ala. The next day he will devote to Tupelo, Miss., which signed the first municipal contract for TVA power. Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, will introduce him at special exercises in the public square.

Reversing his course, Mr. Roosevelt then heads for Warm Springs, pausing en route to greet citizens from the rear platform of the train when it passes through Birmingham. The President will remain at his "other home" in Georgia until the first part of December.

Hull Accompanies President.

Accompanying the President as he left Washington were Secretary Hull, former Senator from Tennessee, and Senator Alben W. Barkley. Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes was to get aboard at Cincinnati tonight, and Senator M. M. Logan will join the party at Harrodsburg tomorrow.

Mrs. Roosevelt was traveling eastward from St. Louis to meet the President at Harrodsburg also, and will continue on the trip to Warm Springs. Others in the Presidential party, bound for Warm Springs, included Miss Nancy Cook and Miss Marion Dickerman, friends of Mrs. Roosevelt; Marvin H. McIntyre, assistant secretary to the President; Miss Marguerite LeHand, Miss Grace Tully and Mrs. Malvina Schneider, secretaries, and Dr. Ross T. McIntire, White House physician.

Aunt Wins Fight For Little Gloria

cret, from all indications by persons close to the case, the order of Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew will be made public Monday and will embody such provisions.

Terms Are Reported.

The American says it is understood Mrs. Whitney is to have almost absolute custody of little Gloria until she is 14.

Gloria, it asserts, will remain with Mrs. Whitney five days a week. On week-ends she may go to her mother, who wishes to bring her up as a Roman Catholic. The paper says Mrs. Whitney is under no restriction to keep the child in any particular place.

When Gloria is 14, she may go into court and choose her own guardian, it says.

The American says Mrs. Vanderbilt is particularly bitter because with Mrs. Whitney her daughter will remain in the care of Emma Keisich, the nurse who testified against Mrs. Vanderbilt at the hearing.

She also feels that if Gloria is with Mrs. Whitney for the next few years, she will be influenced to such an extent she will choose to remain with her aunt instead of her mother, according to the account.

The guadians of Gloria's $2,800,000 estate, George W. Wickersham and Thomas B. Gilchrist, met with counsel in the drafting of Justice Carew's custody order in compliance with the court's instructions.

After the conference, Mrs. Whitney declared:

Mrs. Whitney Talks Monday.

"I can not say anything now. We have all promised not to make any statement. On Monday, I will have a great deal to say."

Mrs. Whitney passed by all inquiries as to whether she would continue to have the child—whose return the mother sought in the drawn-out habeaus corpus proceedings that were closed to the public.

Herbert C. Smyth, counsel for Mrs. Whitney, said he and Nathan Burkan, Mrs. Vanderbilt's attorney, had oultined the order of custody and would draw it up soon.

Mrs. Vanderbilt, the widow of Reginald Vanderbilt, was not at the courtroom while the attorneys were conferring.

Justice Carew closeted himself in his chambers and refused to see anyone.

Attorney Smyth said before entering the chambers that only one interpretation could be placed on the court's declaration that little Gloria's future must be different from her life up to 1932, when Mrs. Whitney assumed care of the child.

"The meaning is perfectly clear," he said. "Justice Carew has ruled that Mrs. Whitney will have the child until such a time as Mrs. Vanderbilt has satisfactorily demonstrated * * * that she is able to take care of the child's welfare."

3. Manufacturing pay rolls were about 4 per cent higher than last year at approximately $500,000,000 for the month.

4. Retail establishments paid their clerks about $250,000,000 or $37,500,000 more than last year.

5. Christmas Clubs totaled $369,800,000 or $36,980,000 more than last year.

U. S. Bonds Gain Support.

Another optimistic item was the Treasury's announcement that its agencies disposed of $16,703,000 of Government securities during the month, indicating the Government bond market, because of rising prices, no longer needs Federal support.

Officials said they expected this year's Christmas business to boost retail sales to $30,000,000,000 for 1934, approximately $5,000,000,000 more than the total for 1933.

the baby, it is wrong now, Fisher said today, in asserting Hauptmann alone carried out the crime.

"There are certain facts in their possession," Fisher said, "which will eliminate this man (Hauptmann) as the guilty man."

Defense Resources Depleted.

He explained the financial resources of the defense will not permit the spending of several hundred dollars necessary to bring Miss Gow here from Scotland, but will call her if she comes to America.

He declined to indicate what the defense hoped to gain by calling the nursemaid. One explanation advanced, however, was that the defense was hopeful Miss Gow would give testimony throwing doubt on the State's contention that the baby was taken from his room by way of the kidnap ladder. In this connection the old theory that the child was taken down a stairway and out the front door was mentioned.

In New York today Edward J. Reilly, chief defense counsel, announced he would bring suit in New York County Supreme Court "in two days" for the release of the $6,000 broker's accounts in Hauptmann's name. Reilly conferred at his Brooklyn office with Mrs. Hauptmann.

"I have asked the authorities in a nice way for this money," he said. "Now I'm going to court and fight for it."

IF YOUR BREATH HAS A SMELL YOU CAN'T FEEL WELL

When we eat too much, our food decays in our bowels. Our friends smell this decay coming out of our mouth and call it bad breath. We feel the poison of this decay all over our body. It makes us gloomy, grouchy and no good for anything.

What makes the food decay in the bowels? Well, when we eat too much, our bile juice can't digest it. What is the bile juice? It is the most vital digestive juice in our body. Unless 2 pints of it are flowing from our liver into our bowels every day, our movements get hard and constipated and ¾ of our food decays in our 28 feet of bowels. This decay sends poison all over our body every six minutes.

When our friends smell our bad breath (but we don't) and we feel like a whipped tomcat, don't use a mouthwash or take a laxative. Get at the cause. Take Carter's Little Liver Pills which gently start the flow of your bile juice. But if "something better" is offered you, don't buy it, for it may be a calomel (mercury) pill, which loosens teeth, gripes and scalds the rectum in many people. "So that's your secret recipe—
I wondered why those Martinis tasted so smooth"

Fleischmann's Dry Gin is especially distilled to blend perfectly in mixed drinks... it's a milder, smooth "American-type" Gin

Nearly everybody makes a Dry Martini the same way:
⅓ French Vermouth, a dash of Orange Bitters
... ⅔ gin. Stirred slowly—never shaken.
It's not the recipe that's so important. It's the gin!

Most American people are discovering for the first time since Repeal that a good American gin—like Fleischmann's—can make all the difference between a mild, smooth-as-silk Martini—and a hard-to-take cocktail that puckers your lips as you taste it.

That's why Fleischmann's has so quickly become one of the largest selling gins.

Fleischmann's is distilled for the specific purpose of satisfying the American taste in gin.

Buy a bottle of Fleischmann's Gin. Notice how nicely it blends—in a Martini—or a Clover Club. You'll see why "only an American gin can make an American cocktail."

Clip out these Cocktail Recipes—Try them!

MARTINI (Use mixing glass.) A dash or two of Orange Bitters, two-thirds jigger Fleischmann's Gin, one-third jigger French Vermouth (Italian for a sweet Martini), a piece of lemon rind, ice. Stir in glass and serve with an olive in cocktail glass.

CLOVER CLUB (Use shaker.) Juice of one small lime, or a quarter of a lemon; white of one fresh egg; a teaspoonful of grenadine; one jigger of Fleischmann's Gin. Shake thoroughly and strain into a large cocktail glass.

Paris Seeking Mining-Franc Pact in Saar

Asks Pre-Plebiscite Accord of League; Won't Talk With Hiller.

Paris, Nov. 15 (AP).—France is trying to get Germany to agree to use gold francs circulating in the Saar to pay for French mines in that territory if it votes January 13 to rejoin Germany, Foreign Minister Pierre Laval told the Chamber's foreign affairs committee today.

Declaring direct negotiations between France and Germany for settlement of the troublesome problem of the mines was no longer possible, Laval revealed that French experts at Rome are seeking, through the machinery of the League of Nations, to obtain the pre-plebiscite agreement.

The solidly-backed francs in the Saar would be used both to pay for French mining holdings, as stipulated in the treaty of Versailles, and to wipe out private debts owed to Frenchmen, the foreign minister explained.

In this way, it was pointed out, seizure of francs to fill any other of Germany's pressing needs for foreign exchange would be averted and the provisions of the treaty would be fulfilled.

Francs are backed more than 100 per cent by gold, while gold coverage of the mark is slight.

Laval, in telling the committee that France would demand strict adherence to the stipulations of the Versailles treaty, said "France must act within the League of Nations."

Previously he had advocated talks with Reichsfuehrer Hitler to untangle the many problems connected with the Saar's possible reversion to Germany. Today, however, he said "the hour for direct conversations is past."

French Refuse Credits, Saar Group Charges

Geneva, Nov. 15 (U.P.).—A petition blaming France as responsible for forcing the Saar territory toward complete economic collapse was handed the council of the League of Nations today.

A group of Saar business organizations declared the basin was facing ruin due to credit shortages, and charged that "French buyers are deliberately refusing to purchase Saar products." It added:

French businessmen refuse the usual commercial credit facilities in the Saar and are withdrawing those already granted * * * French banks have refused to discount bills drawn by and on residents of the Saar, as well as withdrawing credit hitherto allowed Saar firms."

The petition criticized the inclusion of the Saar in the French Customs Union, asserting:

"It is imperative that the Saar frontiers with Germany be opened for the introduction of German goods sufficient to insure an equilibrium of trade between the Saar and Germany."

In a covering letter transmitting the petition to the council, Geoffrey G. Knox, Saar commissioner, admits the French have reduced or withdrawn credits, due to the prevailing uncertainty as to the Saar's status after the January 13 plebiscite. The people vote then on whether to return to Germany, to become part of France, or to remain at present under the control of the league.

A committee studying the Saar situation was reported reliably prepared to recommend self-government for the territory in the event the people vote to retain the present status.

Petty Spite Cause Of Flag Incident, Teacher Alleges

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 15 (AP).—The Pompey Hollow School flag controversy advanced to new grounds today as Miss Esther De Lee, 21, dismissed teacher, sent a legal appeal to the State Department of Education. She asserted therein that the trustee who discharged her after an argument over the display of the flag used "a trivial incident" as a means of "gratifying a petty spite."

James M. Armstrong, the trustee, served this morning with notice of the appeal conferred with George T. Fuggle, district superintendent who has sided with him, then marked time. He has ten days to answer the petition, and then the Department of Education will hold a hearing.

"Armstrong," said the appeal, "became offended because he thought his children slighted at a Halloween party."

Noted Doctors at Security Conference

be brought into play if insurance reserves are exhausted.

The advisory group on old-age pensions is considering various means of collecting the necessary funds, and what age limits would be covered in the program. If only those over 65 were embraced, for example, no premium payments could be expected from beneficiaries-to-be. On the other hand, if persons were brought into the program at an early age, a straight insurance plan might suffice.

Secretary Perkins said the special conference on health benefits is expected to report within two weeks. A select group of physicians has been named to consider proposals from the point of view both of the private citizen and the medical profession. No final conclusions have been reached, and some opposition has arisen in medical circles to a Federal-administered health-benefit plan.

The President's speech on Wednesday to social service workers was interpreted by Miss Perkins as not unfavorable to a broad economic security program. The White House stand for unemployment insurance, in her opinion, prevented long debate on the subject, and possible postponement. Old-age pensions and medical benefits were mentioned as subjects that ought to be covered, she insisted.

Relief Administrator Hopkins backed her up.

"I don't think he shut the door on any legislation," he said.

He declared old-age pensions will have to come in time, stressing the necessity for preliminary study.

"We have got to devise an American plan for economic security that is essentially our own and fits into the American scheme of things," he said.

Pamphlet 'You and Machines,' Written for CCC, Is Banned

Flechner, Corps' Chief, Declares Professor's Work 'Unsuited.'

Robert Fechner, commander of the Nation's 350,000 Civilian Conservation Campers and for 20 years executive officer of the International Association of Machinists, put his foot down yesterday on "You and Machines."

"You and Machines" is a 55-page pamphlet, profusely illustrated with comic drawings, which was written expressly for consumption by the third of a million youths enrolled in one of President Roosevelt's favorite New Deal projects.

Its author is Prof. William F. Ogburn, of the University of Chicago. Internationally known as an economist and sociologist, he gained additional laurels about five years ago through his direction of the "Survey on Economic Trends." He was an early director and member of NRA's Consumers Advisory Board, resigning because of differences with Gen. Johnson.

Last summer he was approached with an offer to write a pamphlet which would be understandable to the type of young man that makes up the bulk of CCC. The General Education Board, a Rockefeller foundation, was supplying the money.

Story Simply Worded.

Dr. Ogburn turned out a simply-worded pamphlet which says, among other things, that "the problem of the modern age is to adjust itself to a new monster, the Machine."

Prof. Percy W. Bidwell, University of Buffalo economics professor who is editing the series, thought—and still thinks—"You and Machines" is a humdinger. So does Dean Clarence S. Marsh, director of education in the CCC camps and adviser in the Office of Education, who is also a University of Buffalo man.

But Fechner has banned distribution of the pamphlet, already printed. He would not comment yesterday on his action, beyond saying that it is unsuited for study by the thousands of campers in his charge.

Following are a few quotations from "You and Machines" which may be said to typify its spirit:

"Man is becoming more and more dependent upon the machine. He leans upon the crutches of civilization."

"What will become of those who have had their work taken over by a metallic man? Will they be crushed by the onward march of the conquering army of automatic machines?"

Standard of Living.

"* * * our standard of living has been greatly raised by the machine. Workers' wages buy many more goods than they did 150 years ago."

"As more and more machines are used on farms, they will throw people out of work just as they have in cities."

"It (the machine) has taken occupations one by one away from the home and placed them in the factory."

"It is a mistake to think of machines and inventions just as stealing somebody's work. Inventions also make new jobs."

"I am a teacher. The long-running phonograph and the talking pictures may take my job away from me some time. If enough such inventions come, and come rapidly, then we shall have more millions of unemployed."

Dr. Bidwell, who commutes between Buffalo and Washington about twice a month to pursue his editorial duties, is philosophically resigned to Fechner's ban.

"It is a good book," he said last night, an hour or so before boarding a train for Buffalo, "and I am satisfied. Dr. Ogburn has done an excellent job in handling a subject so that boys of grade school education will pick up the pamphlet and read it through. And enjoy it, besides learning something."

The ban, though, will influence not only "You and Machines," but also the nine others in the series which were to follow. Now, Dr. Bidwell pointed out, publication of them all will have to be held up until there is some assurance the others won't meet the same fate.

Other Topics of Series.

Unemployment, farming problems and the crime situation are among the topics to be covered in the series. The $40,000 of Rockefeller's fortune which was made available for the educational project is in the hands of the American Council on Education.

Six college professors, selected from a list of 50 by Dr. Bidwell, spent prctically all of last summer living in CCC camps to learn what the youths would like to read about. And in what form. Then, after their observations were supplemented by questionnaires sent to 225 camps, they set to work writing on the subjects held most popular.

"It was a big job," summarized the editor, seated in a small office on the fourth floor of the Hurley-Wright Building.

Officials close to Fechner declared he barred the book probably because he thinks it draws too gloomy a picture. (Incidentally, the illustrations for "You and Machines" are by Frederic G. Cooper, well-known artist for Life and Colliers.)

In Chicago, according to the Associated Press, Dr. Ogburn said he thinks his latest book is optimistic, rather than pessimistic, because "my view is very optimistic regarding the future of our country."

"There is nothing radical about the book," he stated. Its concluding sentences read: "It is youth to whom we must look—not old men. They must learn to adjust themselves to the machine * * *. The problem of the modern age is to adjust itself to a new monster, the machine. Its habitat is not the forest, but the modern city. The future is in the hands of youth."

'Kingfish' Jams Dictator Plan Through House

Long's Opponents Admit Futility of Fighting Against Senator.

Baton Rouge, La., Nov. 15 (AP).—Almost without a murmur, Senator Huey P. Long's extraordinary session of the Legislature set the machinery in motion today to enact his "share the wealth" dictatorial program and adjourn tomorrow. Representative Mason Spencer, of Madison, admitted hopeless defeat for the anti-Long group. "You have heard," he added, "about that sign hanging up in a Texas church which read, 'Don't shoot the organist, boys; he's doing the best he knows how.'"

Representative Rupert Peyton, a fiery young anti-administrationist from Shreveport, who has wailed many a swansong for Louisiana under "Kingfish" rule, concluded today that, "I'm not the Messiah to deliver Louisiana from Huey Long." "But," Peyton added, "that doesn't mean I've gone over to him, though."

Representative G. W. Lester, of West Feliciana Parish, who protested the passage of bills without reading, filed a statement in which he charged "perversion of democratic government." The statement was "just for the record," he said.

Sessions Are Routine.

The Legislature held only brief sessions today to place the bills on routine for final action. It will be up to the Senate tomorrow to wind up the session by passage of the House-approved bills and make them ready for officials' signatures in the briefest time permitted under suspension of the rules.

That foregone conclusion was expected to chalk up another victory for the "Kingfish" administration of Senator Long and Gov. O. K. Allen, since all the measures are administration bills, and there is no organized opposition.

Under the program the Louisiana Public Service Commission is given complete authority over utilities, the State bank commissioner will be authorized to grant two-year suspension of debts, municipal police and firemen will be dominated by a State civil service and a new State bar association will pass upon the qualification of lawyers.

City administrations, principally that of New Orleans, hostile to Long will be stripped of much of their political power by appointment of the majority members of boards being vested in the Governor's office, where the "Kingfish" hangs his hat.

An afternoon session of the Senate finance committee, with Senator Hugo Dore, of Ville Platte, presiding, assumed the aspect of purely legislative routine for favorable reference of the bills for final action.

The "Kingfish" took charge of the committees and pushed the bills through to indorsement at the rate of a bill every two minutes.

Mary McCormic to Get Final Decree Tomorrow

Los Angeles, Nov. 15 (AP).—A final decree of divorce will be given Prince Serge Mdivani, Georgian prince, and Mary McCormic, former opera star, here Saturday.

The decree was expected to have been entered today but lawyers found the original judgment had not been docketed until November 17, 1933. California law requires a lapse of a year between entering of the interlocutory and final decrees. Miss McCormic sued the prince on the ground of cruelty.

Carroll County Indicts Eight

Clarence Smith to Stand Trial on Charge of Perjury.

Westminster, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Clarence E. Smith, 25, of Boyds, Montgomery County, one of eight persons indicted by the Carroll County grand jury this week, will be tried during the present term of court on a charge of perjury.

The charge against Smith resulted from his application here for a marriage license when it is alleged that he gave the age of Edna Mae Hawkins, of Boyds, as 18. The indictment said the girl was 14.

Thomas R. O'Farrell, of Westminster, was indicted on a charge of manslaughter as the result of an automobile accident on September 23, when Miss Oda N. Wheeler, 17, of Greenmount, a passenger in the car driven by O'Farrell, was fatally injured.

An indictment was also returned against George Miller, 18, of near Westminster, charged with arson. In a statement to Sheriff Ray Yohn, Miller allegedly confessed he set fire to the barn of his cousin, Norman Miller, near Union Mills, after his sister, Mrs. Rosie Crohister, had allegedly told him his cousin's horses were "bewitched" and that he would be bewitched if he did not set fire to the barn.

Mrs. C[illegible]hister was indicted on a charge of counseling arson.

Stolen Child Acid Scarred, Doctor Finds

Scouts Belief Distelhurst Girl Was Buried While Alive.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 15 (AP).—Dr. Herman Spitz, acting coroner's physician who examined the body of 6-year-old Dorothy Ann Distelhurst, discovered in a shallow grave here, said tonight her face had been mutilated with acid. He discounted a theory of police that she was buried alive.

District Attorney General J. Carlton Loser, heading the investigation into the child's abduction and slaying, said earlier tonight he believed acid had been used and that Dorothy, killed by blows on the head, had been buried alive, though after she became unconscious.

Dr. Spitz said his examination revealed acid marks in the upper bones of the chest and in the neck and an absence of any flesh on the facial bones, whereas the flesh was not missing from other parts of the body.

The doctor, a bacteriologist and pathologist, said he concluded the child had been dead for some time before her body was hidden in a shallow hole scooped in a remote corner of the grounds of the Davidson County Tuberculosis Hospital.

Law enforcement agencies continued to search in vain for a clew to the person who kidnaped her, gagged her, killed her with a hammer and buried her body under a thin layer of soil.

The funeral was set for 2:30 p. m. tomorrow at the Belmont Methodist Church, where the 6-year-old kindergarten student attended Sunday school. Members of Dorothy Ann's Sunday school and kindergarten classes will be honorary pallbearers.

The Department of Justice pushed its investigation into the case, but made no announcement as to what progress, if any, was being made.

A. E. Distelhurst, father of Dorothy Ann, was in New York, seeking to arrange a contact with the supposed writer of one of several ransom notes, at the time the body was found.

Reed Abandons Ballot Charge

Tells Sen. Byrnes He Won't File Contest Against Sen.-Elect Guffey.

The Senate Campaign Funds Committee decided definitely yesterday to abandon its investigation of the Pennsylvania senatorial election, according to the Associated Press.

Chairman Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, announced the committee's decision after being told by Senator Reed, Republican, defeated for reelection, that he would not file a contest or any charges of excessive use of money in behalf of the successful candidate, Democrat Joseph F. Guffey.

Byrnes said the committee also had been told by its Pennsylvania investigator, Donald Russell, that "there was no evidence either as to excessive contributions or as to corrupt methods of expenditures by Mr. Guffey."

Byrnes said no hearings were contemplated in any State with the possible exception of New Mexico, where it was understood Dennis Chavez, Democrat, would contest the election of Senator Bronson Cutting, Republican.

White House Gives Thanks

The President's Thanksgiving Day proclamation calling on the American people to "dedicate ourselves anew to work for the betterment of mankind" was issued yesterday.

The text of the proclamation follows:

"I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, hereby designate Thursday, the 29th day of November, 1934, as a day of thanksgiving for the people of the Nation.

"Thus to set aside in the autumn of each year a day on which to give thanks to Almighty God for the blessings of life is a wise and reverend custom, long cherished by our people. It is fitting that we should again observe this custom.

"During the past year we have been given courage and fortitude to meet the problems which have confronted us in our national life. Our sense of social justice has deepened. We have been given vision to make new provisions for human welfare and happiness, and in a spirit of mutual happiness we have cooperated to translate vision into reality.

"More greatly have we turned our hearts and minds to things spiritual. We can truly say, 'what profiteth it a nation if it gain the whole world and lose its own soul.'

"With gratitude in our hearts for what has already been achieved, may we, with the help of God, dedicate ourselves anew to work for the betterment of mankind.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done in the City of Washington this fifteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and thirty-four, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fifty-ninth."

Reserve Board And Treasury Forge New Link

Greater Harmony Between Agencies Seen Work of Eccles.

(Associated Press.)

Harmony prevailed last night between the two mightiest cogs in the Administration's financial machine—the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board.

With the elevation of Marriner S. Eccles to the governorship of the board, and his consequent pledge of cooperation with the Treasury, clear indications were that these two agencies would go hand in hand in whatever is attempted in a monetary way.

"The close and friendly cooperative relations between the secretary of the Treasury and myself will be continued," Eccles said as he received his commission from the hands of Secretary Morgenthau.

In making the presentation, Morgenthau called Eccles "an able leader, excellent executive and one with whom it is a pleasure to work."

While highly regarded by President Roosevelt, Eugene R. Black, former board governor, was a conservative and opposed abandonment of the gold standard. He likewise is said to have protested when the Government took over the Federal Reserve Bank's gold. But Eccles frankly is more liberal. Because of intimate association with Morgenthau as his special assistant for the last eight months, Eccles has a comprehensive knowledge of the Treasury's future aims and policies, and apparently agrees with them.

'Beauty Kits' for CCC Youths Obtained at Record Low Cost

200,000 Purchased Under New System for 67 Cents Each.

The Government is taking no chance on stirring up another Senate investivation of the "beauty kits" used by the Civilian Conservation Corps boys.

Before letting contracts for 200,000 of the kits, it was revcaled yesterday, samples of the toilet articles were submitted to the Bureau of Standards for checking to determine if they met specifications.

A record low price of 67 cents a kit was obtained by purchasing the articles from various manufacturers and allowing the War Department to assemble them. The first kits bought for the CCC cost $1.40 and led to a Senate inquiry which involved Louis McH. Howe, Presidential secretary, and led to a shift in purchasing power from the CCC to the War Department.

The kits contain a metal soap box, soap, tooth brush and container, toothpaste, shaving brush, shaving cream, safety razor and blades, mirror, sewing kit, and comb.

War Department officials explained the low purchase price on the ground of increased competition among manufacturers, the dropping of brand names, and the scattered buying plan.

The kit purchasing is but a small part of a $22,000,000 program of equipping the 361,328 CCC enrollment with clothing and household accessories for the winter.

Turkey Production Up In Franklin County

Waynesboro, Pa., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Good weather has aided Franklin County in producing an unusually large number of turkeys for the Thanksgiving and Christmas season.

Poultrymen say that the price will be low because of the large number of turkeys. Indications are that there will be a greater demand than ever before. Not many birds are being shipped to city markets from the county at the present time, but as the holiday season nears, many truckloads will be sent.

Borah Charge Lacks Proof, Says Hopkins

FERA Administrator Finds No 'Shameless Waste' in Fund Dispensing.

"Shameless waste" charges preferred against the Federal Emergency Relief Administration by Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, were not substantiated by any factual evidence, Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins said yesterday, in parrying a barrage of allegations by relief critics.

"Senator Borah gave our investigator no specific cases on which he based his charges," Hopkins said. "He has a feeling administrative costs are too high, and some people are holding FERA jobs only through influence. He offered no facts to prove it."

Charges Disproved.

He said the Idaho Senator submitted an anonymous letter charging unnecessarily high administrative costs in one State, but an investigation proved it groundless. He said Borah may have other evidence he has not submitted.

Meanwhile, the relief administrator replied to charges by Representative Hamilton Fish, New York Republican, that a campaign letter designed to intimidate "destitute and needy Americans," and signed by 11 Federal relief workers, was distributed in Putnam County, N. Y., before the election.

Hopkins declared none of the signers has ever been on a FERA pay roll, and only two were on the relief rolls.

"Much as I might deplore the content and implications of theior letter, it seems to me that it represents nothing more than the free exercise of constitutional rights on the part of American citizens."

Eddie Rickenbacker Predicts 10-Hour London to N. Y. Flights

Engine Design Progress Will Speed Service, Ace Declares.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

New York, Nov. 15.—Ten-hour air transportation service, on regular schedules, between New York and London, and Weest Coast ports and Hawaii was predicted today by Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, American war ace.

Marked progress in engine design and development of personnel efficiency, will make this possible, said Rickenbacker, adding that he expected to see regular trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific air transport service established in "three years."

"In six to eight years," he said, "it should be possible to go from New York to London, in eight to ten hours, and from the West Coast to Hawaii in the same period of time."

"All this," he emphasized, "can be accomplished with perfect safety and comfort to passengers."

Predicts Ocean Service.

Rickenbacker's prediction was made as he reviewed events that permitted him to establish a near record for transport plane travel between New York and Miami, Fla.

Recently, Rickenbacker, using a transport plane, flew from Los Angeles to New York, 3,111 miles, in 12 hours and 4 minutes, at an average speed of 215 miles per hour.

The distance between London and New York, by water, is 3,334 miles.

"With proper cooperation from the English and French," he said, "I think we'll see transatlantic and transpacific service in three years. I predict that the success of American engineers will stimulate long-range airplane service to Europe and the Orient, beyond their conception. In Europe, they have just awakened to the progress we are making here."

America, Rickenbacker asserted, is "way ahead of Europe" in the manufacture of airplane engines and equipment, with the possible exception of the manufacture of large engines, of 1,500 horsepower or more, which are mainly produced in the British Isles, and used for large "flying boats."

Calls for European Aid.

European countries, Rickenbacker observed, should feel that they must keep up with America in the development of air equipment and facilities, so that distances may be shortened, improving international relations.

"Such cooperation from Europe would eliminate petty intrigue and selfishness," said Rickenbacker, "and insure peace."

Rickenbacker observed that his recently completed flight from New York to Miami and return was not staged for "stunt" purposes, but "to prove that you don't have to have a racing plane to show phenomenal speed."

"The flight proves, further," he continued, "that we can get speedy service in from New York to Miami, from New York to New Orleans, and from Chicago to Miami. In a year we'll jump the speed of air transportation and mail service 100 per cent. The speed of transport plane engines has been boosted from 120 miles to 200 miles an hour, knitting the country closer together. The people will appreciate that as time goes on."

Bermuda and the Azores are considered by Rickenbacker as the focal points of future transatlantic air service. He envisaged regular service between Los Angeles and Hawaii, San Francisco and Hawaii, and Portland, Oreg., and Hawaii. The Hawaiian Islands would be the center for movements of transport ships to New Zealand, Australia, Japan and the Philippines, he said.

Judge Upholds NIRA Legality

Richmond Drug Company Is Denied Right to Undersell Code.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 15 (AP).—Judge Robert N. Pollard today upheld the constitutionality of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Virginia Industrial Recovery Act in overruling a demurrer filed by the Standard Drug Co., charged with violating the retail drug code.

The decision was handed down in the Richmond Law and Equity Court.

The company was brought into court October 26 by the retail drug code authority, which sought to restrain the company from selling drug items below the manufacturer's per dozen list price. The company admitted violating the code, but denied the constitutionality of both the national and the Virginia recovery act.

Admirable Concentration.

President Roosevelt may have dashed the hopes of some enthusiasts by his decision to let most of the so-called economic security program wait on the development of unemployment insurance. But his attitude is well-taken for at least three major reasons.

In the first place the device of unemployment insurance is of incomparably greater social importance than either old-age pensions, health insurance, maternity aid or other developments which are properly matters for State rather than Federal initiative.

In the second place concentration on the most important part of the program at this time should result in a practical plan so far as unemployment insurance is concerned. This is far more desirable than any attempt to rush through a lot of confusing legislation on duplicating problems, with the probable result that all the schemes would prove half-baked and subject either to failure or at least radical revision in order to make them workable.

Finally, if the Federal-State plan of unemployment insurance is to be a success, the State Legislatures meeting in January for two or three month terms must be encouraged to focus on that objective and let secondary issues slide. Unemployment insurance in the United States is a development of sufficiently fundamental importance to deserve the most serious consideration. There has been far too much of the slap-dash in the recovery program already, and this is decidedly a field in which undue haste would mean intolerable waste.

By the same token, the President has done well to emphasize the necessity of creating an unemployment insurance system which is sound from the actuarial standpoint. The scheme, as he says, "must be financed by contributions, not taxes." This is a matter of long-range building, not emergency relief. Improvement of our present dole arrangements is one problem. Introduction of unemployment insurance is quite another. To confuse the two problems would solve neither.

Two Different Matters.

After a month of operation under the Securities Exchange Act, President Whitney of the New York Stock Exchange concludes that the authority of the Government will be an "aid in the promotion of those practices which assure a continuous and stable market." It may be necessary, he says, to modify the regulations or perhaps amend the law from time to time. But he emphasizes that the Stock Exchange, the new regulatory commission, and the Federal Reserve Board, are all cooperating harmoniously to maintain a free and open market in which just and equitable trading principles are assured.

This gratifying indorsement is apt to make the uninformed believe that the approval of an authority has been given thereby to the Securities Act of 1933, which regulates the issuance of securities. The fact that the stock control measure and the Securities Act are administered by the same regulatory body, the Securities and Exchange Commission, encourages confusion.

It is quite evident, however, that Mr. Whitney is entirely concerned with the law and the regulations applicable to trading on organized stock exchanges. He does not discuss the restrictive features of the Securities Act which, as investment bankers and other experts point out, tend to prevent a revival of the market for new capital issues in addition to interfering with refunding offerings.

A Municipal Stadium.

Hope that Washington may soon have a municipal stadium, as well as an addition to the city's park system, is aroused by the grant of PWA funds for study of the proposed development in the vicinity of East Capitol street and Kingman Lake. The project is in line with the efforts of the District government to improve that important section of the city lying east of the Capitol. There is an especial need for additional park area to serve the Southeast and Northeast.

A number of questions are raised, however, by this initial grant of funds. If the National Park Service brings in a favorable recommendation, will the PWA advance funds for construction of the stadium? Recent experience shows that the advice of investigating experts is not necessarily followed. There is no precedent to warrant an assumption that Secretary Ickes will make funds available for a District project because it has been approved by PWA-financed experts.

Would this improvement become a charge against District taxpayers? Additional park area is desirable, especially on the west bank of the Anacostia. But it is questionable whether such a project should be undertaken in preference to the first unit of the Municipal Center, for example. Even though it is highly desirable, the construction of a municipal stadium must be balanced against all the other pressing needs of the rapidly growing National Capital.

Unified Banking.

Senator Fletcher announced some little time back that there was no occasion to consider any important banking legislation at the coming session of Congress. This week, after a conference with President Roosevelt, the Senator observes that there might be some amendments to the banking law designed to make all banks doing a commercial banking business take out Federal charters.

Senator Fletcher may consider this a minor matter, as indicated in his press interview. But actually the point he now raises is one of the most important in the whole realm of financial policy. It means that the Administration is considering a legislative program for the coming session that includes provision for a unified commercial banking system in the United States.

This step, it will be recalled, is in accordance with the recommendation made by a unanimous Federal Reserve Board in a report presented to the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate on March 29, 1932, in the following language:

> It should be recognized that effective supervision of banking in this country has been seriously hampered by the competition between member and non-member banks, and that the establishment of a unified system of banking under national supervision is essential to fundamental banking reform.

The dual system of banking, under which bank charters are granted by States as well as by the Federal Government, has been a major cause of the banking debacle in this country. No careful student of our banking structure, either at home or abroad, doubts that the dual set-up has resulted in constant competition between the State and national system. This competition has constantly weakened the proper safeguards of sound banking.

The issue which Senator Fletcher has now introduced in terms of understatement is, therefore, one of the most important before the Nation. It is to be hoped that President Roosevelt will not waver in his purpose to create a fundamentally sound banking system by carrying through a program requiring Federal charter, Federal examination, and Federal supervision generally of the institutions dealing with commercial-deposit banking.

The thesis that legislation to this end might prove unconstitutional will not hold water. Two years ago the General Counsel of the Federal Reserve Board submitted an opinion on the subject to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, holding that a commercial banking system unified by restriction to Federal charters would be constitutional on more than one ground. No reputable lawyer has so far questioned the soundness of that opinion.

Up to the time of the bank panics in this country, this necessary reform was constantly opposed by bankers interested more in size and power and profit than in the trustee relationship which their profession should consider first and foremost. Let no one imagine that there will not continue to be opposition, from the same sources as have successfully blocked bank reform in the past.

But President Roosevelt will have behind him at this time a widespread popular desire to have a banking system which is fundamentally sound, and capable of being maintained in sound condition by proper supervision. The needed reforms, also, are more likely to assure than to interfere with the reasonable profits to which the banking profession is entitled to aspire.

Words And Bones.

In true scholastic tradition Catholic University has created two new departments in two ancient fields: anthropology and comparative philology. No great innovation is marked by this emphasis on highly academic fields of study. Yet these changes at Catholic University are indicative of a renaissance in real scholarship.

A few years ago announcement of new university departments generally pertained to schools of business, finance, salesmanship or commerce. In the so-called heydey of prosperity our colleges were well on the way to becoming training schools for money grubbing. It is not only natural but highly desirable that the universities should now revert more nearly to their original function.

Aside from all of the economic maladjustments of the current era, preoccupation with economic problems is one of the notable weaknesses of our civilization. Oft-repeated warnings against a cultural and spiritual breakdown in this machine age are not merely imaginary fears. Progress consists of something more than bathtubs, radios, typewriters and skyscrapers. Intellectual interests can not be progressively sacrificed to economic advancement without debasing the community to a purely material level.

It is encouraging, therefore, to note this local reversal of the headlong dash of educational institutions toward commercialism. Research into the original sources of language and into the habits and customs of primitive man may not increase the profits of merchandising, nor help students to curtail crops more scientifically. But it will uncover the springs of social understanding, and it should serve to strengthen our sense of direction in place of accelerating our reckless speed.

Work For Washingtonians.

As Commissioner Allen anticipated, his plan to have the District engineer department construct the Municipal Center with relief roll labor is meeting considerable opposition. Civic organizations are completely in sympathy with the Commissioner's aim of putting the indigent unemployed to work. But some of them fear that the Allen plan would be too costly, that the labor would not be efficient and that a premium would be placed upon enrollment for relief.

An interesting compromise is suggested by the Washington Taxpayers' Protective Association. It would have such projects as the sewage disposal plant and the Municipal Center constructed by private contractors who would agree to employ bona fide residents of the District who have lived here for two years or more. Executives of the construction company and technicians would be exempted from this requirement, but the employment of local residents for routine work would be made a part of the contract.

Private builders might not be willing to draw their workmen directly from the relief rolls. They could not properly object to securing their labor through the District's Employment Center, which now places appropriate emphasis on the reliability of the men it recommends for jobs. Indeed, use of our public employment machinery in this connection seems to be the one factor needed to make the Taxpayers' proposal practicable. In this way good workmanship could be assured, together with the economy of private management, while retaining at least most of the community benefits contemplated by Commissioner Allen.

An almost exact precedent for this plan may be found in the German "productive unemployment relief" program introduced after the war. Even the Socialist government then in control in many municipalities admitted that private contractors could handle large construction projects more economically and efficiently than the state. But in letting these contracts provision was made that all semi-skilled and unskilled labor be hired through the public employment exchanges. By this method the reliable workers most needing employment were found jobs without any sacrifice of economy.

If this plan should be adopted here the question of conflicting authority over the workmen who might be transferred from the relief roll to jobs would not arise. Employes could be discharged for cause by the contractor, but he would have to go to the Employment Center for bona fide resident workmen to take their place. Not all of the jobs thus distributed would go to relief beneficiaries, but the plan could unquestionably achieve the major objective of reducing the number of unemployed in Washington to the extent of the number of jobs created.

Adversity's Sweet Uses.

Since the morning after election, it seems, much sympathy has been wasted on the G. O. P. of Pennsylvania. Nowhere in the country did the sweep of the New Deal appear quite so crushing. One naturally assumed that the once Republican strongholds of the Keystone State—which have scarcely been invaded since the Civil War—would be a wilderness of sackcloth and ashes. But out of the debris left by Joe Guffey comes a voice of actual rejoicing.

For 50 years, says the Wilkes-Barre Record, strong men well-qualified to be President of these United States have stalked to Washington from Pennsylvania. But they have never reached the White House. Why? Party leaders have said: "Pennsylvania is a sure Republican State. We must choose our Presidential timber from a doubtful State to swing its votes in the Electoral College." So the great men of Penn's Woodland have come and gone and the Nation has been denied the fruits of their executive genius.

But now! Pennsylvania has ceased to be "safely Republican." The prescient Record looks into the future and sees a Republican National Convention appeasing the dole-fed inhabitants of the Keystone State by the selection of a native son to run for President. With this skillful journalistic gilding, calamity takes on the appearance of manna from Heaven. Sweet, indeed, are the uses of adversity.

"Does the Constitution Protect the Individual?"—Caption of a magazine article. Perhaps as much as the average individual protects the Constitution.

A Liberal Defined.

(From "City Editor," by Stanley Walker.)

A liberal, at the latest taking of temperature, and with only a few precincts missing, seems to be a man like this: He is not a member of the Union League Club. He likes Jews. He frowns on lynching. He is hot for peaceful picketing and bitter against Cossack policemen. He is tolerant of both Karl and Harpo Marx. He wants to deport Dr. Haefstaengl, here for a college reunion. He swears by the Bill of Rights, but is always tinkering with it, scraping and varnishing. He likes dirty books. He is a rabid individualist, stringing along with Thomas Jefferson Mondays and Fridays, and the rest of the week he is a collectivist. In short, he doesn't make sense. His label is frayed. He is a lost maverick wandering on the vast ranges of the world of journalism, politics and ideas. And he knows no brother.

The Dead Level.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Henri Amiel, the great Swiss philosopher, said: "Democracy rests on the fiction that the majority has not only force but reason on its side, and possesses the wisdom necessary for action. The democratic instinct makes men believe that pretensions have only got to be the same to make merits equal."

Amiel was right. Democracy places all persons on a dead level. Youth vies with age and women with men. Authority is not obeyed, or gray hairs respected. The counsel of wise men is despised, and the will of parents is flouted. Any head that dares lift itself an inch above the heads of its fellows is smartly tapped for its presumption. True leadership can not arise in a democracy, for true leadership implies inequality and rank, ideas which are obnoxious to a democracy.

Democracy in America has fallen to its lowest level, to the doctrine that the whole sum of human happiness flows from handing out loaves and fishes to the multitude. Christ fed 5,000 men with five loaves and two fishes, to teach men that food for the body should not be their chief concern. But the Government proceeds on the theory that well-fed men are happy men. If this be so, then Circe was a true benefactress of men when, with a wave of her wand, she turned Ulysses and his crew into grunting, well-fed swine. But they were not happy, for they remembered that they had been men.

Law Enforcement.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The most vital and compelling issue before the American people is that of the enforcement of the criminal law. The authority of the States and of the National Government is openly challenged by the lawless element.

Rich gangsters with their hundreds of confederates in every large city of the country openly and successfully operate, murdering and robbing banks in the broad daylight. We have met this bold challenge of murder, robbery and general lawlessness with loud boasts of promised action—with vain pretense and weak action, but without any real and effective action.

In the District of Columbia we have an aroused people, Bar Association meetings and a large meeting at the Mayflower Hotel, with nothing practical accomplished.

We are not going to get anywhere with boasts, lacking real performance, by either the Department of Justice nor by the authorities of the District of Columbia. What we need for effective enforcement of the criminal law is common sense, honest, competent and courageous action and not words—action and not press interviews, radio talks and speeches before law enforcement meetings. We are not only overrun with the gambling element. We are, according to The Post of November 12, overrun with robbers of all kinds. We are first, within the past six months, in comparison with other comparable cities in larceny cases involving property of a value of $50 or over; second in minor larceny cases, and auto thefts here in the past year total 1,476, to say nothing of the countless holdups and general lawlessness in the District.

From these facts comes the inevitable conclusion that something is seriously wrong with the law enforcement authorities in Washington.

CHARLES B. CALVERT.
Mount Rainier, Md., Nov. 12.

Floridian Boom.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is said that Florida is expecting to have another real estate boom in the near future. This will give joy to the owners of Florida real estate, who may have an opportunity later on to sell out at a profit. The last boom was disastrous to a multitude of speculators, but it returned a harvest to those who sold out at the right time. These periodical booms are always found at the crest between depressions. As a matter of fact, it is land speculations which more than anything else create business depressions.

If Florida desires to avoid the wrong kind of booms, which consist in robbing Peter to pay Paul, and at the same time desires to establish a real boom for the benefit of all and with injury to none, it will abolish all taxes on incomes and inheritances, also upon residences up to a valuation of, say, $5,000. This would constitute substantial progress in the direction of real prosperity. This plan has always been successful wherever tried, and particularly so in the city of New Westminster, British Columbia, and others of the Canadian Northwest. We are going to have to choose between Socialistic experiments and single tax.

HENRY WARE ALLEN.
Wichita, Kans., Nov. 9.

Quantity Vs. Quality.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a reformed versifier, I have a great fear of a plague of poets. At least 45,000 dabblers in verse are ready to seize an encouraging moment to fall upon our land with a flood of verse. There was a time when poetry was a shady business carried on in garrets, but now the uncountable bards boldly proclaim their imagined right to a place in the American sun. The healthy resistance of publications was for long our safeguard against poetic excess, but the radio has undermined that bulwark by turning its facilities over to versifiers. If our publications weaken, all is lost.

A real poet is the most unorganizable thing on earth, and yet today the versifiers are organizing with a vengeance. What were formerly mutual admiration societies have become unified outspoken groups. Their class consciousness is so far developed that they demand a poet laureate in every State, and their demands, in some instances, have been satisfied. Even the New Deal has been besieged and strong pressure is being brought to have the alleged poets maintained or aided at the taxpayers' expense. Taxpayers will support almost any novelty, but I can scarcely imagine that they will aid the tribe of scribblers that infests our Nation.

Our hope for defense lies in the press and the publications of our land, and may they never weaken. In the meantime, poetry will be found in abundance, and real poets will arise without aid or comfort and despite the pseudo competition of the horde of versifiers. Real poetry never begs and never accepts charity. The real and only purpose of the potential onslaught is to bolster up ordinary egos. In this troublesome day, we have no time for that.

A REFORMED VERSIFIER.
Washington, Nov. 12.

"De Luxe."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I'm not what might be termed a "conscientious objector," nor am I even what is facetiously known as an "irate taxpayer." I'm just a human being with the curiosity generally attributed to human beings and cats. This curiosity prompts me to ask just why the Capital Transit Company officials serenely, even blithely, refer to the Chevy Chase bus service as "de luxe."

The "de luxe" part might have been all right ten years ago. But the idea of retaining the word now, in spite of windows that won't let up or down, back seats which are said to accommodate five comfortably, but don't, and the general rattle-trap effect, intrigues me. My speculations have led me to believe that it is a sheer piece of optimism on the part of the company. Again, it might be a bit of bravado, a sort of carrying-on-in-spite-of-all spirit. But, as I bounce up and down and lunge around corners in one of these brave and optimistic buses, the word "de luxe" assumes defiant proportions. And the 20 cents that I have paid for the privilege of this beating assumes war-debt dimensions.

In view of the fact that Webster's Dictionary says that "de luxe" means "unusually perfect in material, workmanship and finish," I timidly suggest that hereafter this route be known as the "Chevy Chase bus service, ex-de luxe."

ONE WHO GETS BOUNCED.

They Worked to Write

An "academy" has been formed in New York to provide fellowships for poets, "to free genius from the necessity of gaining a livelihood by almost any means except the means it was born to use." Such a scheme may gratify the desires of its originators to do something for American literature, but the effects may not be so beneficial to promising poets. Many of the world's finest poets never worked at any other occupation except writing, but, on the other hand, many of the finest poets worked at occupations that could not always be called congenial to the muse. Yet their poetry does not reveal indisputable evidence that their genius was impaired by their labors to earn bread.

Many poets have held public office at some time in their careers, others toiled at manual tasks while writing some of their best work. Chaucer was page, diplomat and comptroller of customs; Campion was a physician; Milton was secretary of foreign tongues to the council of state; Lamb was clerk in an accountant's office; Matthew Arnold was a school inspector, among other things. Holmes was a physician, Whitman a carpenter and later a clerk in the Treasury Department, Lowell a college professor and an ambassador. Lanier was a lawyer, Eugene Field a reporter. Among living poets Masefield, the laureate, worked in a saloon and a carpet factory; Edwin Arlington Robinson was clerk in the customs service; Sandburg was a truck driver, dishwasher, harvester and salesman; Robert Frost a bobbin boy; Edgar Lee Masters an attorney.

The Post Impressionist

The Delectable Doctor.

Post Office, Friday.

CRUELTY to doctors is foreign to our nature. We like doctors better than we like lots of other folk: better than waiters, for instance. Waiters don't talk shop so much as doctors do, and that makes waiters' talk preferable at mealtimes. But there are other times.

* * *

Therefore we sincerely regret having hurt medical sensibilities by quoting, a while ago, some harsh words of R. Jarvis about the art of Galen. We are glad, in reparation, to answer the question propounded to us by a doctor:

"What do you—what does any layman—expect of a doctor, anyhow?"

For every quack doctor, there are a score of quack patients: not only quacks for the quacks, but quacks for the genuine physicians. There is the extreme type which likes to live in hospitals and will injure itself in strange ways to satisfy that abnormal appetite. And there are those quack-patients who go from doctor to doctor for no apparent reason except that they enjoy having professional heads shaken over them.

* * *

Once, while we were patiently adorning the waiting-room of a doctor-friend of ours, we saw a thin, pale fellow shuffle into the chamber of consultation. Presently the doctor, addressing us as a fellow practitioner, asked us to come and look at the patient. That individual told a long and rambling story: there was kidney trouble that half the doctors of Washington had failed to cure—a liver complaint that baffled Baltimore — a strange spleen condition that felled Philadelphia.

Our doctor (call him Smith) said: "I believe you have Smith's Disease."

What was that? Oh, it was an obscure disease of the vasomotor system. Smith described its symptoms. The patient said he had them all—had had them for years and years.

"If," said Smith, "I took this piece of wire and with it traced letters on your bare chest, the skin would rise up in red welts and form those letters and remain that way for 15 minutes, perhaps an hour."

* * *

Was the patient frightened? He was not.

"Try it," said he.

And Smith complied.

And the experiment was successful. . . .

"That was a real test for a real disease," Smith later confided to us. "And the response was absolutely positive. Nevertheless, the fellow hasn't any disease at all. Perhaps you can explain it: you're a newspaper man. I'm a doctor; I can't. All I know is that, if I hadn't told him he had something the matter with him, he'd have advertised me as a fake."

However, when the physician has really found a real disease in a real patient, that patient naturally wants a good name for it. He doesn't want any of your short, common names that everybody can understand. He wants something long and sonorous and Latin—Greek if possible, but Latin as a minimum. And then he wants the doctor to explain it to him so he can explain it to all his eager friends.

Of course, none of us likes to go to the doctor—still less, have him come to us, professionally—more than need be. We like to meet him on the street or happen upon him at the club, and, stating an allegedly hypothetical case, pump him for some free medical advice.

Nevertheless, when we have believed ourselves ill enough to consult him on a business basis, we don't want too light a bill, either. If the bill is trivial we must have been wrong: our illness must have been less than trivial. And nobody cares to have been only slightly ill. Let the bill be of dignified dimensions: there's never any hurry about payment.

Finally, all sorts of patients have one want in common: we all want our doctors to be good listeners. We want the physician to sit still and let us begin with our first childhood memories and progress, through all our ills, to the present moment.

We want to tell him just how we feel and why we feel like that. We want him to know how much our mental worries affect our physique. We want to narrate our money-losses and our wife's opinion of us. It is absurd for a doctor to try to understand the effects of warm-storage lobster upon our digestion unless he has a thorough knowledge of how our first case of measles left us near-sighted.

O, doctor, in our hours of ease,
We read pneumonia in a sneeze;
If thou wilt not so diagnose,
We say: "'Tis little that chap knows!"
But when thou listenest to how
We suffered last year, suffer now—
A ministering angel thou!

Good Horses, Mickey Mouse, Stir New York

Thoroughbreds Attend Show; Silly Symphonies Have Theater.

By Ralph E. Renaud.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—With the closing of the National Horse Show at Madison Square Garden it may really be said that society is fully launched on its winter season. As comports with the nursling plant of optimism which seems to be slowly unfolding its leaves over New York, this prismatic event was more coruscating this fall than at any time in the last, lean five years.

Anyone who thinks the show consists of the horses is a dim-wit. Noble steeds these animals are, with their shining flanks and arching tails (horse feathers to you). And their great-hearted efforts in the ring win quick and generous applause from the crowd.

It is all right to applaud a horse. It is also good form to applaud a performer on a horse. But it is scarcely de rigeur to burst into a storm of hand-clapping as the boxholders take their seats. Nevertheless, it is there the interest lies and thereon that the eyes are focused. Names are conspicuously placed so identification is easy. If the eager admiration of the watching throngs, which range from the fringes of society down to the stable followers, must perforce be silent, it is none the less genuine.

There never was such a display of ermine as graced this year's horse show. When this was removed the dazzling flash quite made up for the lack of bare-back exhibitions in the ring. A fashion expert would have had a fit (and what is more suitable to a fashion expert than a fit?) at the modes, yet the color spectrum was by no means confined to the gentler but more determined sex. No, indeed—there was plenty of gold braid as a foil for the ermine, and the military uniforms, from the scarlet of the Canadians to the azure of the Chileans, made rainbow spots all along the barriers.

America may have gone overwhelmingly Democratic in the election, but New York, nevertheless, likes its more brilliantly flaunted symbols of class distinction. Of course, when we have achieved The Almost Perfect Proletarian State there won't be any more horse shows—except possibly in New York.

It was the United States Army team which proved themselves the best riders, winning over the Chileans, the Irish Free State, the Canadian and the French teams, and carrying off the trophy donated by the President of Chile. But it was the Canadian Mounties, those boys who always get their man, be it in Arctic snows or the suburbs of Toronto, who captured the plaudits of the crowd.

Including their leaders, there were 34 of these sinewey, silent fellows visiting this country for the first time. Decked out in their black and scarlet livery, which we trust is not what they wear on the trail, and carrying pennoned lances, they made a show so brave as to be irresistible. And how they could ride! Not the wild riding of the rodeo, though there is a dash of that in their exhibition, too, but intricate evolutions to music which it would seem almost impossible to execute afoot, much less on horseback. Of all the new features introduced at this year's show, and there were plenty, theirs was the best. And beyond the shadow of a doubt, so far as this writer is concerned, they got their man.

MICKEY MOUSE now has a theater all to himself on Broadway. Well, not exactly all to himself, because other animated cartoons are shown there, too. In fact, the entire program consists of animated cartoons, but it is Mickey Mouse's theater, even if his name doesn't appear officially over the door.

Robert Schirmer, who has set up shop for Mickey in the little Bijou on Forty-fifth street, brought his idea from Paris, where, for some time, boulevardiers old and young have been enjoying a cinema which displays the proud device: 'L'Heure Joyeuse de Mickey Mouse." The New York venture is only a month old but has already built itself into a promising success. After all, the cartoon theater was just as inevitable as the news reel theater and, to those who know the complete delirium of cartoon addicts, it is the answer to a compelling psychological urge.

Mickey, naturally, is the star performer at the little playhouse. "Scrappy" does pretty well, too, especially with the youngsters, and "Pop-eye, the Sailor" has an equal following among the grown-ups. "Three Little Pigs" has been the most popular of the cartoons so far shown and one school-teacher, whose education evidently had been neglected, confessed to seeing it 18 times. That is the point at which, for most spectators, three little pigs become sausage.

The oddest customers haunt the cartoon theater—policemen, for instance, and Chinese and deaf mutes, to whom the ordinary sound accompaniment of the motion picture playhouse means nothing. In the mornings traveling men drop in to kill a little time, but the afternoon is for the children either with or without their harrassed nurses and mothers. Sometimes the little people are checked by their mothers who like to go shopping. Don't think, though that animated cartoons don't appeal to the grown-ups. Tally sheets show that they predominate four to one, except Saturdays and Sundays.

Some day Mickey Mouse is going to have a family of little Mickey-mice. Then there will be Mickey Mouse Theaters in every hamlet of the land, as there should be.

HORTICULTURAL wizards have already given us the thornless rose, the spineless cactus and the seedless orange. The only things left for the complete vegetable happiness of the human race were crunchless celery, squirtless grapefruit and the scentless onion. Now, believe it or not, the scentless onion is here.

It appeared at the recent annual flower show among plenty of fragrance, a modest contribution of the New York Botanical Garden. It is a native of Algeria, one of the few things there that don't smell. It will flavor a soup or a salad but leaves no tiniest trace of perfume. Though it fills a long felt want neither will it bring tears to the eyes. It should now be possible to munch an onion and not have your best friends tell you.

"We finally had to move from that apartment on account of the roaches!"

Strong Leadership

THE intensive fight for the House leadership seems to have taken on renewed vigor when the American Legion convention went on record as favoring the bonus. It had sort of simmered down before that, or at least, insofar as activity around here was concerned. Without checking on the situation one supposed that Joe Byrns had the speakership fairly tucked away.

BARGERON

Immediately, though, the legion came out for the bonus the fight flared into the open again. What have come to be known as "thoughtful" people agreed that, the bonus now coming up to be one of Mr. Roosevelt's greatest problems, the need for a strong House leadership was manifest. As we understand it, everybody in the country is thinking these days, but as opposed to these are the so-called "thoughtful" people. So when one says that "all thoughtful" people agree upon something it is a very grave matter which is at stake.

• • • •

So all of a sudden all of the thoughtful people agreed that the matter of the House leadership had taken on an entirely different complexion. It had been the feeling theretofore, presumably, that the leadership was not a matter of much great moment, and, inasmuch as Joe was next in line for the Speakership, the job might as well go to him.

But with such a serious problem as the bonus coming up—well, now that was a horse of another color. The thoughtful people in this instance—that is to say, the people who most fully realized the gravity of the situation—were largely the rival candidates for the place and their friends. That it was a grave situation and one which called for deliberation on the part of thoughtful men they were in full accord. There are differences of opinion among them as to just which one should handle this grave situation, but there is no conflict at all on the question that it is too grave a matter for Joe.

• • • •

The matter is really so grave that one frequently hears that the White House will simply have to step in, notwithstanding its plain aversion to doing so.

"Oh, the President will have to step in," the explanation goes, "because the need for strong House leadership is now so important."

What has apparently been overlooked in all of the arguments is that maybe the White House doesn't know where to look for the strong leadership even if it were inclined to become involved, which it isn't.

So far as his record on the bonus is concerned Joe stands out like a Gibraltar of strength as compared with the other candidates. Why, every one of those fellows whose names we see mentioned as candidates voted for the bonus at the last session. Joe didn't. He voted with the Administration.

• • • •

Let's see. There are Sam Rayburn, of Texas; Rankin, of Mississippi; McCormack, of Massachusetts; Mead, of Pennsylvania, and Bankhead, of Alabama, every one of them supporters of the bonus at the last session. McCormack and Mead have been advertised as strong dark horses, the latter because of Joe Guffey's influence. They not only voted for the bonus but for silver as well. Only Joe, of the bunch, stood with the Administration.

It is not intended to suggest that this disproves the claim of these men to strong leadership capabilities. The ways of leaders are so tortuous and involved that frequently it impossible for the non-leaders to understand them.

It maybe, for example, that one of the reasons they voted the way they did at the last session was to show that Joe is not a leader, but a very weak man, instead. In this event they would seem to have dug an awful hole for themselves, though.

New Faces in the Senate — — Rhode Island's Mr. Gerry Gerrymandering Named for Returning Senator's Grandfather.

This is the seventh of a series of sketches of the newly elected Senators, written by competent observers. Another will appear in this space tomorrow.

By Elliott Thurston.
(Post Staff Writer.)

PETER GOELET GERRY, Senator-elect from Rhode Island, is a unique figure on the American political stage. He was the only one to recapture a previously lost Senate seat. He is far from being a New Dealer, yet triumphed on a fatal day for most conservatives. A New Yorker by birth, he invaded Rhode Island politics by way of Newport and ever since the World War era has dominated the Democracy of the territorially smallest State. His great-grandfather was a signer of the Declaration of Independence and at the time of his death Vice President of the United States.

By many of the current rules of politics, Peter Gerry would be doomed. He began life with the political handicaps which are implied by great wealth, education by private tutors and at Harvard. He emerged on top of a political heap under which men bred to the sheltered life would ordinarily be trampled by the rougher and readier battlers in the arena. There is no denying that without the inheritance of ample wealth, Peter Gerry would never have survived the struggle.

Yet he plunged into it when he might have taken to a life of luxurious ease but for a heritage from the signer of the Declaration who believed that public service was a duty. And he so far avoided a capitulation to the political tenets of the times as to retain the earmarks of his favored environment and education—even to an Ascot tie. Hence Rhode Island's conglomerate Democracy, composed largely of the newer immigration, were not deceived. Gerry was with them but not of them. He made no pretenses.

MY own first recollections of Peter Gerry, candidate, go back to war-time mass meetings in Providence when he would come on the stage, a tall, slim figure, immaculate, too well groomed for a politician. He went in then for higher collars than Mr. Hoover used to affect—and the flowery Ascot tie. He was no orator. He had none of the robust tones, words or mannerisms of any number of his party contemporaries who were trained in the school of rafter-ringing debate. But he talked effectively and to the point.

Natives of the Providence plantations have always been somewhat resentful of the political invaders from outside, who have at times picked off the bigger plums of public office. The opening offered is exceptional and naturally tempting to aspiring public servants who seek it. Thus R. Livingston Beeckman, another New Yorker by birth, demonstrated that Rhode Island's political citadel could be breached by attack through Newport. It may be that Beeckman's capture of the Governorship on the Republican ticket, after a period of grooming in the State Legislature, gave Peter Gerry the idea for achieving even greater success on the Democratic ticket.

Anyway, both of these New Yorkers perceived the opportunity and seized it, and both have encountered the resentful hostility of the natives, who prefer indigenous to transplanted political loyalties. Beeckman never could quite understand why some of the Republican cliff dwellers let him into their clubs, played golf with him, and yet remained cold to his political ambitions. Gerry suffered no such resistance within the Democratic Party itself, since the Republicans had a virtual monoply of the cliff dwellers and of the "old families" in general. But whenever Gerry has run, including this last time, there has been much muttering about the "outsider."

• • • •

YET as American politics go, Gerry is an old-timer now, though he is but 55. Supplied with a Harvard training and a law degree, he became a member of the Rhode Island bar in 1906. Six years later he broke into Newport's representative council and became a delegate to the Democratic national convention. At once he captured the Democratic nomination for a seat in Congress and won the election. After one term in the House, 1913 to 1915, he was ready to scale the highest pinnacle offered from the vantage point of Rhode Island. He won a Senate seat in 1917. He occupied it until the Hoover landslide narrowly nosed him out in 1928. Felix Hebert, Republican, the first French-Canadian to achieve the Senate, triumphed. But a week ago Tuesday, Gerry had revenge. Thanks to the New Deal, with which he did not have much sympathy, he turned the tables on the anti-New Deal Hebert.

PETER GOELET GERRY.

His first campaign for the Senate was against Henry F. Lippitt, who perpetuated the Republican tradition exemplified by Aldrich and the earlier guardians of Rhode Island's industrial welfare, who felt that high tariffs and heavy immigration were the two prime requisites to the abundant life. Gerry won in 1916 because it was still a Democratic year, and because Henry Lippitt had the misfortune of being accused of the authorship of a phrase he had never used. The deadly phrase was to the effect that a dollar a day was enough for any working man.

• • • •

BUT Gerry was no free-trader, and no menace to industrialism. He was and remains a conservative. As the National Cyclopedia of American Biography says of his previous senatorial career:

"Senator Gerry is considered a conservative member, seldom speaking but always voting. He favored the League of Nations, national prohibition and all measures for the relief of war veterans. He voted for reservations on the World Court and the Oriental four-power pact, and opposed cancellation of the World War debts. He favors a moderate tariff, a reduction of taxation and an adequate merchant marine, but he is against a subsidy for ships flying the United States flag."

Peter Gerry was assigned the role of chief attacker of the sugar tariff when the Fordney-McCumber bill was in the making, and his tilting against this "iniquity" served somewhat to obscure his contrasting solicitude for the textile tariffs so dear to Rhode Island industrial hearts. But his senatorial preoccupations did not preclude a concurrent social career, which blossomed even more fully after his second marriage, in 1926, to Edith Stuyvesant, daughter of George Warren Dresser and widow of George Washington Vanderbilt.

• • • •

BY WAY of better political fortification, Gerry, early in his public career, acquired the Providence News, later combined with the Tribune, thereby affording enough of a Democratic journalistic voice to reach ears accustomed only to Republican thunderings.

Gerry, since his defeat in 1928, devoted himself to rebuilding his fences. If he sounded no clarion calls from his tribune, he at least attended diligently to cultivating his Democratic garden.

There was no more ardent Al Smith man than Gerry was in 1928, which, though it did not save him then, lost him no favor with the Irish Catholic majority in the Rhode Island Democracy. And his cause was helped further by the endless ructions in the Republican camp between French and Irish Catholics.

• • • •

BUT his ardor for Al Smith was to prove somewhat complicating. Gerry went to the Chicago Democratic convention in 1932 committed to Smith and the "Stop Roosevelt" cabal. He communed with the chief cabalists—conspirators to Mr. Farley. Thus, when the Roosevelt evolution went into effect, Gerry was not one of the B. C. loyalists of the New Deal. It seriously complicated his fence-mending. The patronage did not come his way. The cash dispensations did not course through his hands.

Peter Gerry, though a comeback, must take his place at the foot of the Democratic class in the new Senate. His seniority privileges will date from 1934, not from 1917. But he is versed in the ways of the Senate. He is no new boy in the school. He will not lead any crusade against New Dealism, but he will be listed among the conservative Democrats who are far from entranced by the shape of things present and to come. By heritage, by training and experience, he will rate well above the Senate's non-computable intellectual average.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

POLITICAL memoirs usually afflict me with jaw-breaking yawns. I come to them resistant, like a schoolboy learning Latin. But two pages of David Lloyd George's War Memoirs and I was won over—three, and I was following this little fighting Welshman and his story for all I was worth. Anyone who wants to go behind the scenes of the Great War and watch the captains and the kings in their tragi-comic mixture of momentousness and squabbling humanity, will here find first-rate reading.

The volume in hand is the third out of six of Mr. Lloyd George's memoirs—"America Enters the World War" (Little Brown, $4). Astonishingly mistified, since America does not join the Allies until the last twentieth of the book, the volume begins with Lloyd George's duties on taking over the premiership in 1916. And then the fun began. He went through governmental deadwood like a hot knife through butter. When the Germans were sinking 35 ships in a week in early 1917 and the British admiralty sat back and said: "Dear me!" with no more than a disdainful glance at the convoy system of protecting shipping, Lloyd George had to remove Jellicoe before the system could be put in action. That it was a brilliant success dazed the admirals more than ever. All through the problems of shipping, of food supply, of strategy on the Western Front, of the Russian revolution, this doughty and commonsensical little civilian made most of the experts appear something less than competent.

Nothing is more interesting than the personalities behind this immense and blundering "blood-stained stagger to victory." Mr Lloyd George minces no words, as that phrase of his shows. When he sees occasion for blame, he lays it on, politely but definitely. And he is no less backward about praise. But if it is true that a man so direct and colorful could hardly avoid personal bias, it must also remain true that history could not ask for a franker and more reasonable account of the human powers behind the Allied "Turn of the Tide."

William Seabrook, one of the best of our articulate travelers, takes us into his smoking room, sits us down, and tells us all about Pere Yakouba in "The White Monk of Timbuctoo" (Harcourt Brace, $3)

The French monk who renounced his vows, married a native woman and became patriarch of a tribe and uncle of the western Sahara, makes just the sort of hero about whom Mr. Seabrook can be his gusty and chatty best. Yakouba appears as an extraordinary, almost incredible, but perfectly true man.

Once Mr. Seabrook asked him if he never wanted to go home.

"Home?" exclaimed fray-bearded old Yakouba. "Where do you think you are? Whose roof do you think this is you're sitting on? Whose Pernod do you think you've got your nose in? I'm home. I wish you would go home, and stop asking me questions!"

Tranquil Again

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

I AM indebted to Mr. Morris D. Ervin, the learned and accomplished Head of the Washington bureau of the Cincinnati Times-Star, for the following valuable and interesting information on the word Tranquillity.

And with this third and final installment I promise never to allude to the subject again in these articles.

• • • •

"Several years ago, a spelling bee was held at the National Press Club in Washington at which members of Congress competed with members of the press. Senator Fess, of Ohio 'pronounced' and when he gave out the word 'tranquillity' Congressman Edgar Howard, of Nebraska, spelled it with one 'l.' Senator Fess ruled that he was wrong and passed the word on to Ray Tucker, now of Collier's staff. Mr. Tucker spelled it with two 'l's' and the press won the spelling bee.

"A few days later Congressman Howard issued a statement in which he called attention to the fact that the word 'tranquillity' was spelled with one 'l' in the Preamble to the United States Constitution and declared, in effect, that he preferred to follow the Constitution even if it meant losing a spelling bee.

"In recent years Mr. Howard has not been as solicitous of the spirit of the Constitution as he was then of its letter but the fact is that he was right about the spelling of the word in that document.

"In the original written copy of the Constitution, now preserved under glass in the Library of Congress, the word 'tranquillity' in the Preamble is spelled with one 'l'. So the person who prepared the copy of the Preamble to be engraved on the United States currency was a strict Constitutionalist, even though he may have been short on spelling.

• • • •

"In the manuscript of James Madison's report of the debates in the Constitutional Convention, also in the Library of Congress, Madison uses the word 'tranquillity' several times and each time spells it with one 'l'.

"Madison writes that 'The Committee of stile reported a digest of the plan of which printed copies were ordered to be furnished to the members.' One of these printed copies is now in the Library of Congress and the word 'tranquillity' is spelled with one 'l'. Mr. Madison was a member of the 'committee of stile.' Is it possible that the error was his?

"Several changes were made in this report by the Convention and then a copy was made in long hand, to be signed. In this written copy several corrections were made between the lines. But the word 'tranquility' was permitted to stand. The members of the Convention disagreed about many things but they apparently had no differences of opinion as to the correct spelling of 'tranquillity', or else they hesitated to tell Mr. Madison that he didn't know how to spell."

Maryland Duck Season Proves Disappointment

Chestertown, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.). Two weeks old, the Eastern Shore duck season thus far is a disappointment to members of gun clubs located on flats of Eastern Maryland rivers and the Chesapeake Bay. The number of ducks and geese in Kent County is far below that of last season.

According to Joseph Watson, deputy State game warden for Kent County, stormy weather, coupled with rain and snow in the north, will drive fowl farther south in the near future and the sporting areas will be more densely populated shortly.

Paris Observer Sees Trend to Right Here

By Andre Vulliet.
(Special Correspondent of The Post.)

"ROOSEVELT is no longer regarded as an economic dictator, attacks against the Brain Trust are not so frequent and new panacaes are not expected from Washington every day," says Gilbert Chinard, Washington correspondent of Le Temps, of Paris.

Chinard thinks that the President is following very closely the reactions of the American people, as shown by his recent speech to the Bankers' Association, and the more lenient policy upon which the NRA is embarking.

"Those changes, far from being unexpected, correspond to the public's wish to accept the minimum of coercion and regulations and to return to a regime of freedom as soon as possible. Though prosperity is still far away, indications are that the United States prepares to go back to its normal life.

"Despite real poverty and unemployment, which constitute a problem causing extreme anxiety, money is flowing back into circulation. An observer who would only judge through what he saw, without looking at statistics, might easily believe that, at least in large cities, depression was over."

RAMOND POINCARE and Louis Barthou, the two French veterans who died recently within a week's time, belonged to the young political set when they started their career together some 45 years ago.

To Louis Madelin, of the French Academy, writing in L'Echo de Paris, it seems their premature realism was a reaction against the wave of romanticism, either literary or political, which swept through the greater part of the nineteenth century.

"Those young leaders," says Madelin, "were hard workers and grave-minded realists. They were not great statesmen, because to be a statesman requires that sensitiveness and that imagination which they certainly did not lack, but which, first as a principle and later as a habit, they banned from their policies.

"They were cultivated, fair, conscientious and industrious patriots who wished to make their country greater, but such precious gifts and noble aspirations were hindered, often paralyzed, • • • by an exaggerated eagerness to hold in check—for realism's sake—their own idealism.

• • • •

"There was in him," he contends, "a touch of poetry and romanticism. Yet, he never got lost in the clouds and always kept in contact with realities. He was, in the full sense of the word, 'romantic in his conceptions and realistic in their realizations.' He knew how to make dreams come true.

"Even in his literary works, one feels that constant mastery over his poetical and creative impulse. He was a connoisseur of music, a lover of letters, a collector of rare books. He was fascinated by plans of wide scope and by personalities with violent passions.

"Mirabeau, Danton, Rosseau, Lamartine, Victor Hugo, Richard Wagner, Beethoven the 'Girondins,' Marshal Lyautey—these are characters to whom he devoted his writer's activities."

• • • •

ON JANUARY 5 1757, one certain Robert Francois Damien tried to assassinate King Louis XV of France with a knife. The King got away with a slight cut, but the would-be assassin went through the most awful torture:

He was laid naked on a table and fastened with an iron ring around his breast. First, the very knife with which he had attempted to pierce the King was used to make incisions in his hands. Then his breast, his legs, his thighs and his arms were tortured with pincers and the wounds were filled with boiling oil and melted lead. • • •

"He was then attached to be torn to pieces. • • • He was pulled by four horses, mounted and whipped by the executioner's assistants. The horses missed him seven or eight times. Two extra horses were added. That did not do either. He was then hamstrung with razors and that did the trick. His two legs and one of his arms were torn away. The remaining arm was detached later; and he was still alive.

"This torture made him howl in the most horrible way. His limbs were then thrown on the table, near his trunk. A fire was lighted beyond and beneath his remains. There were, for that purpose, at La Greve 30 'voyes' of wood. Damien's torture, before he was set ablaze, lasted two hours and a quarter."

Such is the pleasant description "Lu," of Paris, has found in official records printed in Lille, in 1758.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Question and Answer Department.

Q.—Is there a Huey Long?

A.—The logical answer would seem to be "probably not," but competent witnesses say there really is a man who behaves like the man said to be Huey Long.

Q.—Is he human, animal or vegetable?

A.—It can not be proved that he is vegetable.

Q.—What is he like to the eye and ear?

A.—Students who have studied him closely see in him no resemblance to any other person, but hold that he combines many of the features of the late P. T. Barnum, Dizzy Dean, Jimmy Durante, Harry K. Thaw, Mussolini and the Man on the Flying Trapeze.

• • • •

Q.—What is he like socially?

A.—Well, you've met the man at house parties who wants to recite "Gunga Din," play the bass drum, take home the cocktail glasses as souvenirs and argue over politics.

Q.—Does he really believe wealth should be redistributed?

A.—He believes it makes a great subject, anyhow.

Q.—How would the Kingfish redistribute wealth?

A.—Well, you take the yolks of three eggs, drop them into a cup of milk, beat for three minutes and . . . oh, from there on it gets a little sketchy.

Q.—Does he really believe what he advocates?

• • • •

Q.—Did the Senator really propose that Louisiana secede from the Union?

A.—Yes, but he says now that he was only fooling.

A.—By asking Huey Long.

• • • •

Q.—How can Mr. Long do what he does under the Constitutions of the State and country?

A.—It's mostly all done by multiple mirrors.

Q.—Is he serious in his proposals that all debts be abolished for two years?

A.—Yes, unless you owe him money.

Q.—Where is that famous Congress of Strange People that formerly featured the opening of circuses and wild west shows?

A.—Have you tried Louisiana?

A senior guidance rally in connection with the educational and vocational program as carried out in all the high schools in Fairfax County was held in the Fairfax School yesterday, with Mrs. Gorden E. Smith, principal of Lee Jackson School and chairman of the county guidance committee in charge.

The speakers were C. J. Hyslup, State director of guidance; Dr. B. H. Van Oot, supervisor of trade and industrial education; W. N. Theft Charge Holds Two.

Charged with attempting to steal gasoline from the filling station of George Denty, at Pohick, Va., early yesterday morning and held for investigation in connection with having an alleged stolen car in their possession, Charles James, 27, and James Watkins, 25, both of whom refused to give any address, are being held in the Fairfax County Jail.

Awakened by noise, Denty rushed to the door and opened fire with a shotgun, hitting James in the right hand. Assisted by neighbors, Denty captured the two who were turned over to Sheriff Eppa Kirby.

Kirby, on searching them at the jail, stated he found a registration card of a Ridley Park, Pa., man. He notified the Pennsylvania authorities.

Damage Suits Are Filed.

Two damage suits totaling $40,000 have been filed in Fairfax County Circuit Court.

One was instituted by Maude L. Cherricks against Daniel Reagan as the result of injuries sustained on the Jefferson Davis highway July 28, when the car in which she was riding was allegedly struck by Reagan's.

The suit was filed by Attorney Amos C. Crounse, of Arlington County.

The other suit for a like sum was filed by Thomas Brown against Lester Dodson and Clyde Atkins.

It is alleged that a truck owned by Dodson and operated by Atkins collided with a car operated by Brown on the Lee highway May 30, 1934, resulting in serious injuries to Brown. The suit was filed by Attorneys Holmes Hall, J. C. Lucas and John W. Rust.

The $2,500,000 sewer project in Arlington County has been consistently represented to the county's taxpayers who voted for the bond issue, it was charged in a statement issued last night by B. M. Smith, acting chairman; C. B. Garnett and W. E. A. McShea, members of the county board.

The three board members revealed that the county-wide sewerage system, which the former county board promised would consist of 113 miles of trunk lines and almost 200 miles of lateral lines, will actualy consist of 28.5 miles of trunk-line sewer and only 75 miles of lateral sewers when the $2,500,000 is exhausted.

Their statement follows:

"As the report of the Chester Engineers, showing in detail the completed sewer system, is now available, it is deemed proper, at this time, to analyze this report and show wherein the completed system will differ from the system proposed to the citizens and taxpayers of Arlington County.

"1. In the statement on sewer project, issued from the office of the county board October 31, 1933, it was represented to the taxpayers and citizens of the county as follows:

"The system proposed will mean the construction of 113 miles of trunk lines and almost 200 miles of lateral lines when finally completed. The trunk-line system, as will be shown by the maps accompanying this statement, radiate to every section of our county and will provide means of sewage disposal from every subdivision and drainage area within our boundaries. It was stated that the program would be completed in two years.

"This was the promise. As an actual fact, when the $2,500,000 shall have been spent, the report of our engineers show that, instead of 113 miles, only 28.5 miles of trunk-line sewers will be constructed; and, instead of nearly 200 miles, only 75 miles of lateral sewers, and the map prepared and filed by Chester engineers shows that there are many drainage areas within the county which will have neither trunk lines nor laterals.

"2. It was further stated that $1,375,000 would be used for the construction of main trunk lines, treatment plants, rights of way, and other items of expense connected with the general system, but, as an actual fact, the engineers' report shows that the completed system will include about $1,000,000 in lateral lines and $500,000 in trunk lines.

"3. It was further represented that the estimate for engineering, surveys, plans, specifications, supervision and inspection, would be less than 4 per cent of the total cost. If this had been a correct estimate, the total engineering cost would have been less than $100,000, but the engineers' report shows that the total engineering cost will be $200,000.

"4. The plans for the system, as shown on the map with the statement and as shown in the application to Public Works Administration, embrace the upper Potomac [illegible] from Chain Bridge to a disposal plant at Rosslyn. In the first estimate submitted to Public Works Administration, this interceptor was estimated to cost $60,335. The engineers' report shows that although only one-fourth of this interceptor, namely, under Mackeys Hill, will be built, this one-fourth will cost $102,000.

"5. The plans for two disposal plants, one at Rosslyn and one at Four Mile Run, which cost $5,200, have been discarded as inadequate and improper; and an entirely different plan for one disposal plant at Four Mile Run is being prepared.

"6. To provide for the disposal plant at Rosslyn, the county board bought a lot and paid $7,500 for it, but this lot will not be used for that purpose, and this purchase was consummated after the board knew that the disposal plant would not be built thereon.

"Many citizens were induced to vote for the bond issue and to subject their property to a tax of 38 cents on $100 for the payment and redemption of the bonds upon the definite promise made in the statement of October 31, 1933, and that the trunk line system, as shown on the map accompanying the statement, would radiate to every section of the county, and would provide means of sewerage disposal from every subdivision and drainage area within the boundaries of the county.

As indicated above, an examination of the map prepared by the engineers, showing the completed system, shows clearly that many drainage areas will never receive any trunk lines or laterals out of the $2,500,000.

The map attached to the statement indicated that trunk lines would be constructed along Rocky Run and Spout Run to the Potomac River, thus affording adequate disposal lines from the thickly settled areas of Clarendon, Lyon Village, Cherrydale, Thrifton Village and part of Ballston. It now appears that only small portions of these lines will be constructed.

With the hunting season opening in Virginia, the report from the county clerk's office shows that a total of licenses issued from July 1 to November 14 was 1,265. Of this number 213 were sold on Wednesday.

Last year for the same period there were issued 1,271 licenses with 222 sold on the last day.

The East Falls Church Citizens Association at its meeting last night elected Neil Stevens president.

Other officers elected were Mrs. Jessie V. Moran, vice president; Philip Nourse, secretary, and Mrs. J. L. Harrison, treasurer.

Delegates to the Arlington County Civic Federation and Town Council together with standing committee will be announced at the December meeting.

Leaf Growers Hold Session

Prince Georges Body Sifts Worth of Cooperative Packing House.

A committee of Prince Georges County tobacco growers yesterday took under consideration the establishment, within the county, of cooperative packing houses for harvested tobacco.

Meeting at the office of P. E. Clark, county agent, at Upper Marlboro, they discussed the advisability of adopting the plan now used in Charles County as a means of assuring higher prices for the smaller growers.

Mr. Clark pointed out that the purpose of the packing houses would be to pack small amounts of each grade of tobacco into one hogshead, thereby allowing that grade to be sold for the higher price brought by that unadulterated grade.

Numbers of farmers, he said, have small amounts of the various grades which they have to mix in one hogshead. This brings lower prices. At the packing houses each grower would be credited with the number of pounds of each grade he brought in, and the grades would be packed together.

The committee formulating the project consists of W. R. C. Connick, F. H. Billingsley, Clayton Townshend, Guy H. Clagett, George A. Aist, A. Stewart Aist and W. S. Hill.

Banker Indicted In Church Debt

Former Cashier Is Accused of Embezzlemnt.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Embezzlement of moneys from the West Virginia Baptist Education Society is charged against Oren F. Morrison, of Salem, former bank cashier and former clerk in the county assessor's office here, in four indictments returned today by the Harrison County grand jury.

The four indictments alleged separate offenses, the four aggregating $1,900 in alleged embezzlements from the society which operates Alderson-Broaddus College at Philippi. Morrison served as custodian of the funds of the society and it is alleged he converted part of the moneys to his own use.

J. B. Diamond Will Contest King's Election

Commissioner Defeated in Montgomery Charges 'Irregularities.

County Commissioner John B. Diamond yesterday announced that he will contest the election of Charles E. King, Fusionist, as a member of the Board of Montgomery County Commissioners.

Commissioner Diamond declared his decision was prompted by consideration not only of himself but of the many county employes whose jobs are at stake in the event the Fusion board takes control.

Official returns gave King an 89 majority over Diamond in the county election November 6, and gave Fusionists three places on the county board, to two Democrats.

Diamond said he had expected to file the petition for a recount yesterday, but that his counsel, Capt. Joseph C. Cissel, had declared it would not be ready for submission to the County Circuit Court at Rockville before Monday.

Recount Sought.

The petition will ask for a recount in the Second District county commissionership election. Upon filing of the petition, the court will fix a bond to insure the costs of the recount. If a gain of more than 2 per cent is shown for the contestant, the bond will be returned and the costs of the recount be paid by the State.

Considerable difference of opinion existed among members of the Rockville bar as to whether it would be necessary to show fraud in order to obtain a recount, or whether it is a right of the contestant so long as he posts bond to cover the costs in the event the recount does not show a gain for him.

Diamond declared in a statement that he issued to the press that he had been convinced of irregularities in the conduct of the election and in the counting of ballots.

He said that he discussed the question with some 50 friends and party leaders, and that all had urged him to ask for the recount in order to determine if there were any irregularities in the election.

Text of Statement.

Mr. Diamond's statement read:

"Since the results of the last general election in the county have been announced, purporting to show that Charles E. King was elected county commissioner from the second commissioner's district by a pluarality of 89 votes, I have carefully considered the question of contesting this election.

"From reliable information which has reached me, I am convinced that numerous irregularities occurred in the conduct of the election and in the counting of the ballots in several election precincts of the county, and I am further convinced that had these irregularities not occurred the result of the election would be materially changed in that I would be shown to have obtained a substantial plurality of votes over Mr. King.

"I, therefore, believe it to be my duty to have the entire matter investigated and the ballots counted under the careful and impartial supervision of the court, in order that the results of the election may truly express the will of the people. For these reasons I have decided to contest the elction of Mr. King in the Circuit Court of Montgomery County."

County Adopts Housing Plan

Prince Georges to Start Campaign for Better Homes.

Under the guidance of the Federal Housing Administration and the local Chamber of Commerce, Prince Georges County business men will launch a "better housing program," it has been announced at Hyattsville.

The county Chamber of Commerce, headed by Daniel C. Fahey, jr., has appointed V. C. Tompkins, jr., chairman of a committee to conduct the drive. He will be assisted by Dr. H. T. Willis, mayor of Hyattsville; M. B. Shuey, K. S. Crisp, Morris Anglin, A. H. Seidenspinner, Thomas H. Welsh and William Bowie. At a meeting Tuesday night at Hyattsville, Donald Linville, assistant to Arthur E. Hungerford, Federal housing administrator for Maryland, outlined the plan of action. He illustrated his talk with a film.

Most banks and financial institutions are ready to lend money for house repair work, he said. The only security required is that the borrower have a regular income and good standing in the community. Government insurance protects the banks up to 20 per cent.

The borrower may apply for a loan of from $100 to $2,000. Notes may run from one month to three years and even longer if approved by the Federal Housing Adminis- may not collect loan costs above $5 may not collet loan costs above $5 on each $100 of the original amount of a one year monthly installment note, deductable in adanvce.

Virginia Tobacco Men Sell 28,000,000 Lbs.

Danville, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Tobacco growers now nearing the end of their crop are hastening to find ways and means of selling their surplus poundage. Under the AAA contract more than a given poundage of leaf can not be sold on the open market, but farmers who failed to make the stipulated allotment can take over the surplus raised by other farmers. In this way a good deal of trading is going on under the auspices of Government inspectors.

Tobacco sold here since the last week in September amounted to 28,000,000 pounds. The daily cash distribution runs from $150,000 to $250,000, according to the quality offered.

U. S. May Yield Japan Nominal Naval Equality

Weighs British Proposal for a 'Parity in Principle.'

cific, tended to complicate the conversations.

The United States and Great Britain stand united on one major point, namely, that any future revised naval accord must include a clause providing for the existing line of demarcation for fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific. This provides that Japan shall not fortify islands or provide naval bases west of the 100th meridian.

However, while agreeing with the British contention on this vital sea strength provision, Washington maintains those limitations would not interfere with the establishment of strong air bases in the United States northern Pacific possessions.

Dispatches from Washington in recent months have indicated a tendency to proceed with establishment of these bases in the event Japan carries out her threat to abrogate the Washington treaty before the end of the year.

It also was emphasized that should the naval conference fail and no treaty be forthcoming, both the United States and Britain would consider themselves entirely free to create new naval bases and fortifications beyond the present dividing line in the Pacific.

The negotiations have reached the stage where a naval accord between Great Britain and the United States is probable, with the adherence of Japan, if possible, but without her, if unavoidable.

Roosevelt and Hull Study Overtures

President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull yesterday began a careful study of cautious overtures made by British delegates in London for British-American cooperation on naval matters in event Japan denounces the Washington and London naval treaty, according to the United Press.

A full report of the conversation and a surprise conference between the British and American naval delegates was cabled to Hull yesterday by Norman H. Davis, chief American delegate to the London conference. Hull took a copy of the cable with him aboard President Roosevelt's special train to the Tennessee Valley.

Officials at the department declined to throw any light on the British proposals. It was understood the proposals were only tentative in character and represented little more than cautious inquiries regarding a possible basis upon which British-American naval cooperation could be founded in event Japan pushes her demand for naval parity.

It was indicated again here that the United States remained determined not to grant tonnage equality to Japan, in fact. Neither will this country agree to the Japanese proposals for drastic reduction in size or number of capital ships and airplane carriers, or their total abolition.

Army and Navy Planes Surveyed Alaska

Two separate squadrons of Army and Navy planes conducted aerial mapping and survey flights in Alaska last summer. In addition Postoffice officials went there to inspect a commercial line established by Pan-American Airways, American company operating in the international aviation field.

On July 19, ten long range bombers left Bolling Field, Anacostia, D. C., on the first leg of their trip to America's northernmost possession. Proceeding by way of Canada, the fliers made the trip in easy stages, arriving there five days later.

During a month's stay there the Army pilots, under Lieut Col. Henry Arnold, mapped 20,000 square miles of territory and inspected landing facilities. On the return trip they connected Alaska and the United States with a nonstop trip from Juneau to Seattle. They arrived back in Washington August 20.

Similarly, the Navy sent 12 planes from the West Coast on an easy-stage flight into Alaskan waters. Six fleet submarines also made a cruise to Dutch Harbor, under Rear Admiral Cyrus Cole, U. S. N.

While in Alaska the military pilots cooperated with the veteran Arctic pilots employed by Alaskan Airways, operating subsidiary of Pan-American Airways. This company has established a system of airlines and has developed airports throughout the possession. Its main lines run between Fort Yukon, Fairbanks, Anchorage and Nome. It also has a line to the Aluetians.

When these commercial aviation bases were established by the American company it appeared probable they would be used as an intermediary point on a transpacific service. However, recent developments have indicated that the transpacific line will go by way of Hawaii and other islands in the Pacific. The Alaskan services have continued, however, being inspected last summer by Harllee Branch, Assistant Postmaster General.

This Nation's stand for continuance of the 5-5-3 ratio—which gives Japan only 60 per cent of the total tonnage allowed Great Britain or the United States—was made known today by an authoritative source, which also took occasion to deny emphatically rumors that an agreement between the United States and Britain was in prospect.

The Japanese today were hosts at a luncheon given in honor of the British delegation. A special guest was United States Ambassador Robert W. Bingham.

Mussolini Aid For Fugitive Blocks Amity

France Incensed by Duce's Refusal to Surrender Alleged Terrorist.

Paris, Nov. 15 (AP).—Premier Mussolini's failure thus far to hand Ante Pavelich, alleged croat terrorist chieftain, over to France for trial in connection with the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia has retarded plans for closer Franco-Italian friendship, it was authoritatively indicated today.

French authorities declared there was slight hope of securing Pavelich's extradition since Italy has shown no inclination to grant the request. French detectives sent to Turin, where Pavelich was arrested, were refused permission to talk to the suspect.

Officials of the Little Entente intimated Italy was fearful of relinquishing Pavelich lest he "etell too much" concerning Italy's supposed part in harboring and paying Croat terrorists.

There will be no immediate amity visit to Italy, Foreign Minister Pierre Laval said today, such as had been planned by Louis Barthou, the late foreign minister, before he was slain while welcoming King Alexander of Yugoslavia last month.

Barthou's moves for Franco-Italian and Italo-Yugoslav reconciliation were blasted by the Marseille assassinations, officials here said, for Yugoslavia insists that Pavelich stand trial.

The possibility of reaching agreements over Italy's claims to a strip of land in the African desert and the status of Italians in Tunis, Laval indicated, now was remote, although conversations were continuing.

Yugoslavia must be appeased, he said, before there is any chance for Franco-Italian rapprochement. French Ambassador de Chambrun will return to Rome Sunday without special instructions from the foreign ministry.

With the Italian question simmering, Laval said he intended to revive the Eastern Locarno project and make an effort to win German approval. Poland refused to have part in the scheme unless Germany signed, and Laval said a fresh attempt would be made to please both countries.

a lower price!
Crab Orchard stepped out ahead in sales and popularity because people liked its honest, natural flavor of straight whiskey—and they liked the price.
In fact—they rolled up such a volume of sales that we could make the price lower.
Remember—there's no artificial coloring—no artificial aging. Just straight whiskey—bottled right from the barrel in Old Kentucky.

Trek Is Begun That Will Weld New Affiliation

Cosmopolitan Star Shifts; Local Actor Acclaimed; Notes on Theater.

By Nelson B. Bell.

It is Mr. Leicester Wagner, United Press' agile observer of the Hollywood scene, who takes the trouble to remind me by wire that when Marion Davies became a star on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, Cosmopolitan Productions built her a 14-room "dressing room," costing in the neighborhood of $100,000, which is by way of being quite a parcel of anyone's do-re-mi!

"Suppose," said some bright chap, "Miss Davies leaves this lot some time. How will we move this house?"

So the house, says Mr. Wagner, was built in three sections and bolted together, against the eventuation of what now actually has happened.

Marion Davies moves over onto the Warner lot, come January 1, and already her bungalow is being moved through the streets of Culver City, Los Angeles County, Los Angeles City and Hollywood to Burbank.

All moving, it seems, must be done out yonder after 11 o'clock at night.

A Sight to See!

It is reputedly quite a sight to see that famous house of Davies speeding down the avenues and boulevards of the film capital with a working crew out ahead seeing to it that no harm comes to the wires that have to be hoisted over the "dressing room's" ridgepole—telegraph, telephone, trolley and what-not.

As has been intimated here before, one of the alleged reasons that Miss Davies, after all these years, is deserting M-G-M and casting her lot on the Warner lot, as you might say, is that all of the better stellar assignments were being given to Norma Shearer. "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" is supposed to have precipitated the break and "Marie Antoinette' added to the volume of Miss Davies' dissatisfaction.

Miss Shearer, it has been more or less generally bruited about, was to have played the title role in "Marie Antoinette" added to the rumored at the moment, that something that would interest Mr. Winchell will definitely defer the production of this film with Miss Shearer as star.

Marion's First at Warner's.

So what would be your guess as to the first picture for Miss Davies at Warners? Quite right. Of course. Nothing other than "Marie Antoinette"—and Jack L. Warner, in charge of West Coast production for the Freres Warner, will personally supervise the making of the fillum.

Already the Warner boys have announced that construction will begin immediately on four new sound stages will set the lads back, sary to house the Davies unit. The sound stages wil set the lads back, as we say in the rear room, to the tune of something more or less remotely approximating $400,000. Employment will be afforded in the neighborhood of 2,000 persons while the job is going on, a period roughly estimated at three or four months.

All right, you Blue Eagle, this is the place to whistle—or whatever it is you do in moments of exultation.

Tomorrow at 1:30 p. m., George M. Cohan, star of Eugene O'Neill's "Ah, Wilderness," at the National Theater, out of regard for Manager Stephen E. Cochran and admiration for his courage in attempting to perpetuate the living theater by conducting the Clifford Brooke Academy of Stage Training in the Dramatic Arts and the National Theater Players each spring and summer, will address the students of the academy in its spacious quarters at Connecticut avenue and K street. The interest of so distinguished a gentleman of the theater as Mr. Cohan should prove a great inspiration to those who aspire to trail along in his wake as torchbearers of the theater's noble traditions.

"Local Boy Makes Good!"

Speaking of George M. Cohan and "Ah, Wilderness," as most of us have been, incessantly, since last Monday night, more or less obscured by the flurry of tributes that have accrued to the star and the play is a fact of prime interest to Washington.

I mean to say that, practically unheralded and unsung, a native-born Washingtonian is appearing in the piece with fine credit to himself. The part is not too big, but it is essential to the play's motivation and it is done with skill.

That would be the bartender, in the scene in which Richard Miller is tempted by the "painted woman," so well played by Ruth Holden. The role is played by Lawrence M. Hurdle, or "Jack" Hurdle as he is better known to his intimates, a graduate of McKinley Tech High School, who, for a time, served as a teller in Bob Fleming's financial bulwark known, colloquially, as the Riggs National Bank. Mr. Hurdle's stint behind the austere grills of the counting house endured for something like three years.

Surrenders to Stage.

The urge of the theater, however, was a little too strong. When he was proffered a place in the wild Ted Healy's "The Gang's All Here," he snapped at it, as if it had been a piece of toast, and from there, by one of those moderate processes of Thespic development, gradually gravitated to the Theater Guild. With this splendid organization he has appeared in "He," "The Pure in Heart," "They Shall Not Die" and "Ah, Wilderness."

His urge, however, is on the side of creative effort in the theater—authorship, direction, creation of mood, scene and tempo.

It is doubtful if he could find very much better auspices under which to foster this ambition than to be associated with the American theater's foremost actor in a play by America's ace dramatist.

"Ladies of the Jury," the first play of the Washington Drama Guild season, will be given in the Wardman Park Theater on the evening of November 26 and 27, instead of November 22 and 23, as originally announced. The considerable cast is headed by Grace Peters Johnson, who will be seen in the role created by the late Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske. Harold Weinberger, who directed "Welcome to His Excellency" and "The Tavern" for the Roadside Theater last summer, also is holding the directorial reins over this production. Edith I. Allen, also remembered for her excellent designer-technician contributions to the Roadside group, is designing the sets for "Ladies of the Jury."

"Ali Baba" Again.

Dancing slave girls and bold, bad robbers will infest the courtyards and caves "in a certain town in Persia," when the Arabian Nights tale of "Ali Baba, or the Cave of the Forty Thieves" is presented tonight and tomorrow afternoon in Central High School auditorium, under the auspices of the Community Center Department, by Washington's Community Players.

With Lisa Gardiner in the fascinating feminine role of the "favorite" Morgiana, there also will be the singing slave, played by Christine Irish, and a Lisa Gardiner dancing ensemble.

Bess Schreiner's production may not quite measure up to that one, but it will come close!

On a basis of international appraisal, Washington's estimate of the worth of "One Night of Love," starring Grace Moore, seems to have been wholly correct. South America reported, "undoubtedly the season's outstanding success;" from Columbia Pictures' Mexican branch manager came the report that the picture was "starting third week and breaking all records," while J. L. McCurdy reported from Australia that it was the "greatest in Australia's history."

Although "One Night of Love" concluded a record downtown run at the Metropolitan last night, it still is not lost to the Capital's picture addicts. Beginning Sunday, it will be shown for four consecutive days at the Tivoli Treater, Fourteenth street and Park road northwest. That, needless to say, would be a Warner house, founded, however, by Crandall.

Honest Confession Note.

This was supposed to have been a wholly original and novel column, as such things go these days.

It was supposed not to have mentioned George M. Cohan.

On Warner Screens in New Films

Lee Tracy, the smiling young man with the handful of cigarette, above at left, is said to have one of the most congenial roles ever assigned to him in pictures in Damon Runyon's "The Lemon Drop Kid," opening today as chief feature of the bill at the Metropolitan. Helen Mack, who appeared with him in "You Belong to Me," again has the feminine lead. At right above is Barbara Stanwyck, star of "A Lost Lady," the screen feature opening today at the Earle, with Waring's Pennsylvanians on the stage.

Straight From the Studios

A Jungle Picture Will Be Studio-Made in Color; Joan Blondell and Guy Kibbee Teamed Again; Intimate Close-Ups of Filmdom.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, Nov. 15.—"Green Mansions" probably will be Merian C. Cooper's first effort for Pioneer Pictures, and will give him fulfillment of his ambition of seven years standing to reproduce a picture of jungle life on the screen with color photography.

JOAN BLONDELL.

The jungle sequences doubtless will be photographed on enclosed stages and the jungle will take the form of sets, because the lighting can be better controlled, which is the all-important thing in color filmization.

"Green Mansions" is the quasi-Nature study in novel form, written by William H. Hudson, and embodies many highly pictorial and dramatic happenings, chief of which is the death of the heroine in fire.

Joan's Return Planned.

"Social Pirates" looms likely as the story for Joan Blondell's return to the screen, in which case she probably will appear opposite Guy Kibbee. He has just returned from a personal appearance tour and goes into "While the Patient Sleeps" at once, with Aline MacMahon opposite in the feminine lead.

This will be followed by "Social Pirate," which concerns a Midwestern couple, trying to crash society by engaging an attractive waitress to pose as their daughter.

Kibbee and Miss Blondell have played in "Havana Widows," "Convention City," "Footlight Parade" and their last together, "Dames."

"Father Goose," Meaning Mr. Sennett.

Who will produce "Father Goose," the Gene Fowler story of Mack Sennett? The producers are interested in this real-life sketch of the famous comedy producer. However, it is understood that Sennett himself will have something to say about disposal of the rights. Who knows? He might even produce it himself. Rumors are that Twentieth Century has been dickering for the story.

Glenda Reports Again.

Glenda Farrell is becoming quite experienced as a film newspaperwoman, which lends credence to a report that she will carry the lead in "Women Are Bum Newspapermen," title subject to change without notice. She appeared in such a role in "Hi, Nellie," with Paul Muni. Her last picture was "Kansas City Princess" and she is now in "Golddiggers of 1935."

Film Pageant In Review.

Following a contest, Photoplay Magazine names the following as winning candidates for roles in "Anthony Adverse:" Leslie Howard in the totle role; Edward G. Robinson, as Napoleon; Bette Davis as Angela; Kay Francis, as Dolores; George Brent, as Vincent Nolte; Warren William, as Brother Francis; Ann Dvorak, as the African girl; Guy Kibbee, as John Bonnyfeather.

Option on Glen Boles' services has been taken up by Warners. He appears in "Flirtation Walk."

"Sons of Steel" will have a cast including Polly Ann Young, Charles Starrett, William Bakewell, as leads, with Holmes Herbert, Aileen Pringle, Florence Roberts, Barbara Bedford, Walter Walker, Edgar Norton and others.

Marylanders Ask $117,000 For Indemnity

Claims Based on Land Taken for Aberdeen Proving Grounds.

Bel Air, Md., Nov. 15 (AP).—Additional claims, totaling $117,000, were filed with a Federal commission here today by Harford County residents seeking indemnity for damages they said they suffered when the Government seized 17,000 acres of land for the Aberdeen Proving Grounds and the Edgewood Arsenal.

The claims entered in today's hearings ranged from $280, asked by a school teacher who charged she was thrown out of work for seven months as a result of the seizure, to $44,000, sought by the John W. Bay Co., a canning firm. Among the other claimants were Harry C. Holloway, dairy farmer, who asked $7,000; the estate of Charles E. Bay, who operated freight boats between Aberdeen and Baltimore until the land was taken over by the Government, and who claimed losses of $15,000; Emily C. Bay, owner of property adjacent to the proving grounds, who said that the value of the land was lowered $23,000 because of its proximity to the proving ground.

Mrs. Frank Swarts, who said she was a school teacher in a one-room primary school near Perryman when the land was seized, said that the school was closed as a result and she lost seven months' pay. She filed a claim of $280 with the board.

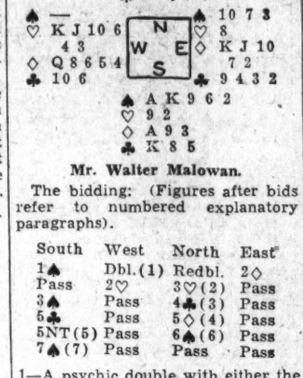
Two Cue Bids.

The bidding and making of a grand slam is still one of the great thrills that Bridge has to offer, and the Four-Five Notrump Convention makes it possible to reach grand slams with greater accuracy than ever before as the all-important key cards are definitely located. There are still cases, however, where slams are accurately reached without this valuable aid. On today's hand North and South, who were Sydney Rusinow and Walter Malowan, reached their laydown grand slam without the convention because of the fact that the bidding of the opponents enabled North to perfectly portray his hand to South by using the overcall of the opponents' bid suit in two different suits. South in the early rounds of the bidding made nothing but minimum responses, but when his partner, after the repeated cue bids, suddenly showed trump support, South was able to bid seven.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable

Mr. Sidney Rusinow.



Mr. Walter Malowan.

South	West	North	East
1♠	Dbl.(1)	Redbl.	2◇
Pass	2♡	3♡(2)	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♣(3)	Pass
5♣	Pass	5◇(4)	Pass
5NT(5)	Pass	6♠(6)	Pass
7♠(7)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—A psychic double with either the heart or the diamond suit for an escape. West fears that the opponents have a laydown game or slam.

2—North immediately overcalls in one of the opponents' bid suits to assure that the bidding will not die before game is reached, and thus that he will be enabled to paint an accurate picture of his hand without fearing that South will drop the bidding.

5—This is not a conventional five-notrump bid but merely a minimum response to North's force. South, although he suspects good spade support in North's hand, is not certain of it as yet and is merely waiting to ascertain just what North is getting at and just what the justification is for North's terrifically strong bidding.

6—North, of course, can not bid seven spades himself. However, he has shown his hand perfectly and realizes that if seven is in the hand South must be able to bid it. North has shown control of both of the red suits and shown that he holds a club suit of his own. He now adds the final touch by supporting spades.

7—South has far more than a minimum opening bid, with 3½ tricks in his hand, including a good spade suit and a good fit with North's clubs. South's three-spade bid was merely a response to North's first force and his subsequent five-no trump bid was also a forced response. South has never shown his additional strength. He realizes that if North can bid six spades single-handed without knowing for certain that South holds the club King, there must be a good play for seven with South holding this card as well as the Ace-King of spades. The seven-bid is merely an example of complete belief in North's strong bidding and a proper realization that South's own additional strength must fit with his partner's hand.

South, of course, did not even have to take the practically marked heart finesse to fulfill his contract, as the fourth club in dummy provided a discard.

Plans Announced For Park Building

Fredericksburg Structure to Cost $50,000.

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Erection of a National Park Service administration building near the battlefield areas here will begin some time this winter, Branch Spaulding, acting park superintendent, said today.

The building is expected to cost more than $50,000, Spaulding said. It will stand in the Government-owned land at the intersection of National boulevard and the Sunken road, scene of the fiercest fighting in the battle of Fredericksburg.

National Park Service employes will be housed in the offices, and the building will also provide rooms for visitors, a Civil War museum and a lecture room. In architectural design the structure will follow the traditional Federal Period type prevalent in this section. It will comprise a two-story main central portion and two adjoining one-story wings.

Benny Gets a Ducking and a Duck.

Did you hear that "pow, pow" just now? You couldn't guess who it was that shot the gun, nor what he killed. It was Grandpa Bear that did the shooting, and it was wild ducks that he was killing. Yes, grandpa had been practicing with that gun that Blackie left up there, and he had learned to shoot almost as well as Jocko could. Several times he had gone out with Howler, and they had found droves of wild turkeys. Bettie said she never had seen one as big as the one that grandpa killed for Thanksgiving, and the only way she ever could cook him was to use her big wash-pot that was out in the back yard. But after she had boiled him good and done, he shrunk up enough so she could get him in the old-fashioned oven that she used in the fireplace, and then she baked him nice and brown, and you may know that he was stuffed with chestnut dressing, for the children and grandpa filled up about everything they could find with chestnuts.

Even if they did have a great big turkey, Benny Bear said he was going to have one duck for his dinner, even if he had to cook him himself. Not that he liked duck meat any better than he did turkey, but he was going to eat just this particular duck, and this is why:

When grandpa was out shooting ducks on Lake Bettie, the day before, he killed two or three so dead that they turned over on their backs with their feet sticking up so that Benny didn't have anything to do but to swim out and take their feet in his mouth and bring them to the bank. Then grandpa shot a great big one that had green and red on his head and he floundered around a good while, diving down in the water, coming up again, and nearly turning over. Benny was a pretty good sport, so he thought he would go and bring this big duck in just as he was. Just as he got most to the duck, he saw him beginning to sink, so he jumped and grabbed his head. But instead of sinking, the duck flapped his wings so that he spattered Benny's eyes full of water, and then he grabbed hold of a baby bear's head—or rather his ears.

If you don't believe a duck can bite, just let one try his bill on you. This duck did some sure enough biting, and Benny did some sure enough woofing, and they had a spattering frolic out there in the water. But Benny was lots the strongest, and he was a good swimmer, and as soon as he got over his surprise, he reached up with one paw and grabbed the duck around the neck. Then he swam to shore with his duck, and that's why he determined to eat that very duck for his dinner.

Court Upholds Water Boost In Alexandria

Increase Authorized by Corporation Body Declared Valid.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU,
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals in Richmond affirmed the decision of the State corporation commission, fixing the valuation of the Alexandria Water Co. at $1,150,000, and increasing its rates 6.4 per cent. This brings to a conclusion the litigation between the company and the Alexandria City Council.

The water company had applied to the corporation for an increase of approximately 40 per cent in its rates for water consumption, effective as of February 1, 1931, claiming that the true valuation of its property was in excess of $2,000,000, and that its net operating income was only slightly more than 3 per cent.

The corporation commission granted an increase of 6.4 per cent on January 1, 1932, effective February 1 of that year, and the company, after placing this rate in effect, appealed to the supreme court of appeals for the additional increase. The city council opposed any increase.

In concluding its affirmation of the decision of the corporation commission, the supreme court declared that the rates prescribed by the commission are "legal and legally prescribed."

The Alexandria School Board has adopted its budget for the calendar year 1935, amounting to $216,400.50, which is approximately $200 less than asked for the current year. Of this amount the city will be called upon to appropriate $165,000, and the State approximately $50,000.

This estimate does not include the cost of operating the new high school for the latter part of 1935, or the new Lyles-Crouch School for colored pupils, for the same period. The operation of these schools, it is estimated, will cost $2,220 for the high school and $2,500 for the Lyles-Crouch School.

The board will furnish the city council a financial statement showing that there is a deficit of $16,441.17, and asking for the immediate appropriation of this amount to meet teachers' salaries and other necessary expenses for December.

The school book rental system now in operation has been a decided success, according to Supt. T. C. Williams. The books are being furnished to the pupils cheaper than any other city in the State, he says. The rental of books for grade pupils costs $1.50 a year, and for high school students $2.

D. C. Book, chairman of the Alexandria United Charities drive for funds, reports that collections now amount to $6,253, and that contributions are coming in rapidly. The indications are that the end of the present week will bring in many additional contributions. The goal sought is $20,000, and the drive will be continued indefinitely, according to Mr. Book.

The Alexandria Police Department has "gone over the top" in joining the Red Cross 100 per cent, and yesterday a 100 per cent organization banner was presented to Sergt. George Everly by the roll call chairman, Louis E. DeMoll.

The Mutual Ice Co. was also placed in the 100 per cent list, every employe of that company having joined.

Virginia Lodge, No. 1076, Loyal Order of Moose, has made plans for a home-coming meeting Tuesday night, when officers of the grand lodge will be present and explain the principles of the order, and the help it has given and will give to the aged and infirm, to orphans, and to the needy in every walk of life.

The Fannie Mercer Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church of Alexandria held an all-day missionary program Wednesday in the church, with Miss Mary Williamson presiding. Mrs. Charles A. Strauss, president of the Presbyterian Missionary Society, was guest speaker at a luncheon; Mrs. Helen Kane Humphreys brought greetings from the Rosalie Broaddus Circle, and Mrs. Norman L. Williamson welcomed the guests and members.

Prince Georges Maps Program In Relief Work

Proposed Grouping of Its Agencies Explained by Miss Wilcox.

Predicting that Prince Georges County is approaching the hardest winter of the depression, Miss Charlotte Wilcox, relief administrator, yesterday explained plans for the proposed consolidation of relief agencies.

She pointed out that, in face of the approaching emergency, every possible precaution must be taken to direct the welfare aid in the most useful channels. The new Community Chest of Washington.

"After three lean years many county residents have exhausted all resources. We will have no CWA to fall back on and the county has no industries to employ the needy. A great portion of the destitute have in the past been employed in Washington or Baltimore," said Miss Wilcox.

Two purposes are listed in the suggested plans for the new organization, which have been placed before the score of local relief organizations. They are "to conserve Federal, county and private funds" and "to prevent duplication of service."

Organization Maintenance.

The new organization would be maintained through Federal, county and private aid. Under the county responsibility is listed the welfare board (to be used as a clearing house for all cases), work relief, direct relief, social case work and rehabilitation, transients, and surplus food distribution.

Under county aid the proposed program carries "indigent aged, chronic ill, including hospitalization, widows with dependent children, care of and commitment of children of improper guardianship, feeble-minded and the like."

The private aid would include donations of clothing and shoes, fuel, medical care in homes, and feed for stock. A list of the private institutions that have been solicited for aid also was released by Miss Wilcox. Four of these have already signified their intention to join in the movement.

The list includes the Federation of Women's Clubs—for children's clothing and shoes; Red Cross—medical care, medicines, glasses, etc.; home demonstration clubs—chapter needlework guild; men's service clubs, including the Exchange Club, Kiwanis, and Lion's Club—dental work and orthopedic supplies.

Also included on the list are the Parent-Teacher Association Federation—shoes for public school children; Ladies of Charity—shoes, parochial school children only; Associated Charities—collection and renovation of used clothing; granges—feed for cattle and horses.

Aid From Churches.

The churches have been asked to share in the program by giving the Thanksgiving and Christmas baskets. The fraternal organizations, such as the Masonic Lodge, the Eastern Star and the Odd Fellows Lodge, have been asked to care for the cases among their membership and to assume other responsibilities solicited by the county welfare board.

"The season ahead is a very uncertain one for all of us," the welfare board declared in a letter to the organizations. "We are confident, therefore, you will agree that not only should all available funds, both public and private, be conserved wherever possible, but that duplication of aid in relief homes is bad administration of any funds as well as highly unfavorable.

"Federal funds will be granted the county to continue the work-relief program and to provide direct relief, such as food, shelter and other needs; but coordinated service should make possible participation in the relief program by all private groups and individuals of the county.

"It is our belief that the various welfare clubs will stand ready to assume responsibility for certain phases of the relief program during the coming winter, and that having assumed such service will continue all their efforts to meeting that particular need. This should greatly reduce duplication of service as well as save money."

Relief Quirk!

Alexandria Woman Gives $15 to 'Charity' in a Strange Way.

Unwillingly and accidentally, Mrs. Olga L. Shuptrine became a relief worker Monday.

According to police, Mrs. Shuptrine, of 215 South Royal street, Alexandria, Va., placed her pocketbook, containing $15 in cash, some papers, keys and a check book, on a counter of a department store Monday afternoon.

The pocketbook disappeared. So did a stout woman, about 40, standing nearby.

Yesterday the check book, the keys and the papers were discovered in a plain envelope on a counter of the Second National Bank, at Fourteenth and G street northwest.

On the envelope were the words, "I need the money."

Mrs. Shuptrine doesn't know whether to feel sorry or glad.

Other Officers Nominated by Volunteer Unit at Cottage City.

Chief S. Z. Tayman of the Cottage City Volunteer Fire Department has been renominated and will be unopposed for reelection at the annual election of officers to be held early in December.

Others nominated include: For deputy chief, Francis Van Pelt, W. A. Bobb and Philip Good; for financial secretary, N. P. Rassmussen and W. A. Bobb; for secretary, D. E. Pitts and G. H. Raab; for treasurer, N. P. Rassmussen; for fire marshal, Alan Leighton, J. Fred Nichols, sr., G. A. E. Rheinbold, T. Weston Scott and F. S. Grooms; for delegate to the County Firemen's Association, V. A. Simmel and G. A. E. Rheinbold; for trustees, V. A. Simmel and Martin De Waters

A committee has been appointed by Chief Tayman to look into the advisability of compiling a new directory for Cottage City and several nearby communities. Included on the committee are T. W. Scott, W. A. Bobb, V. A. Simmel, C. A. Locke and G. Wells.

In 1926 the department issued a directory of nine nearby Maryland communities, including Mount Rainier, Brentwood, Cedar Croft, Colmar Manor, Cottage City, Hyattsville, Riverdale, Lenox and Moyers Park. This directory was compiled under the direction of Marshal A. Davis.

Chief Tayman has also appointed a committee to cooperate with the Community Brotherhood Club in arranging for the third annual Christmas tree and distribution of toys and food to the needy families of this area.

It has been announced that an oil burner is being installed in the firehouse at an estimated cost of $200 and that through the generosity of G. H. Raab, who was assisted by several of the members of the department, the interior of the firehouse has been redecorated.

G. H. Raab and Philip Good have been appointed by Chief Tayman as emergency drivers for department apparatus.

Nimrods Active As Season Opens In Prince Georges

Hundreds of sportsmen donned scarlet hats, picked up oiled and gleaming guns, and whistled for their dogs in Prince Georges County yesterday.

It was the opening day of the season for partridges, squirrels, rabbits and doves.

The deer season does not begin until December 1 in Garrett, Allegany and Washington Counties and is entirely closed in Prince Georges County.

The office of Brice Bowie, clerk of the circuit court, where scores of gunning licenses were issued yesterday, announced that several deer had been sighted on the farm of Thomas Magruder, near Upper Marlboro. Another deer is reported feeding occasionally with the cattle of a Brandywine, Md., farmer, and a third has been seen at many places throughout the region.

The wild-water fowl season opened November 1.

Pitts and Wife Act to Prevent Property Sale

D. C. Court Asked to Block Disposal Order Pending Ownership Suits.

Attempting to halt the sale of personal property assessed at $183,000 which the Government now holds because of unpaid income taxes, Mrs. Gladys T. Pitts and her husband, G. Bryan Pitts, yesterday asked the District Supreme Court to order cancellation of the sale until suits already pending determine the ownership of the property.

The petition disclosed that jewelry belonging to Mrs. Pitts, which was seized in Atlantic City two years ago, and which is now assessed at $33,000, is to be sold in Atlantic City at auction Saturday. The claim was made that the jewelry actually was worth $150,000. Because of the priority given the Government in such cases, the jewelry can be taken over by the Internal Revenue at $33,000 if there is no bid acceptable.

Another lot of personal property, consisting of stocks and bonds, with an assessed value of $150,000, is to be sold in the Internal Revenue Bureau offices November 22. Attorney Richard L. Merrick, acting for the petitioners, contended the property was worth much more than the assessment placed on it by the Treasury, which will take it in at the assessed price unless there is a higher bid made at the sale.

Two years ago the Government levied a $2,000,000 assessment on Pitts for failing to pay income taxes from 1926 to 1930. Property worth $3,000,000, which included four Rolls-Royce automobiles and a palatial summer home in Florida, was seized and most of it has been sold. According to the attorney, the Government is now trying to collect $534,482.59 from the Pitts, despite a stipulation entered into last January in which the Treasury agreed to take $137,000 in full settlement.

Mr. Merrick said he would ask the District Supreme Court today to issue a rule requiring the Treasury to show cause why the sales should not be postponed until the court has determined the merits of the case.

Pitts, former head of the F. H. Smith Co., is now serving a lengthy sentence at Lorton, following his conviction on charges of embezzling millions from that company.

Oil Stove's Blast Destroys Home

Fire caused by an exploding oil stove last night destroyed the home of Clarence Reburn on the Rockville pike near Rockville, Md.

Reburn was not at home when the fire started. He was at work in the offices of the Washington Vault Works nearby. A motorist saw the flames and called the Rockville Fire Department.

Arnon L. Mehring Fills Vacancy On Hyattsville City Council

H. A. Harrison Loses Post Through Election Activities.

The Hyattsville mayor and council last night elected Arnon L. Mehring to fill the vacancy caused by the "resignation" of Howard A. Harrison, councilman from the First Ward.

Harrison lost his seat on the council as the result of election activities last week, when he served as an official in the Hyattsville First Precinct. Attorney General W. Preston Lane, jr., had previously ruled that a councilman can not accept an election post without vacating the council.

Harrison said he had learned "something" of the ruling and had asked Lane for a statement. He said he had no reply and went on and served in the election, as no trained substitute could be obtained at the last minute.

Corporation Counsel H. Winship Wheatley, jr., informed Harrison that he "resigned" from his council post as soon as he accepted the election position, and that he had not been a member of the council since the primary election in September, in which he also served as an official. Wheatley pointed out that Harrison could not be restored to the council by resigning his election post.

The council's election committee last night could not reach a decision on a successor and the matter was referred to the council as a committee of the whole. The latter voted, 5 to 1, for Mehring's appointment. Mehring will serve out Harrison's unexpired term until the annual town election next May.

Mehring was sworn in last night by Justice of the Peace John J. Fainter. He is employed as a scientist with the Department of Agriculture.

Trolleys Favored By Takoma Park

Trade Body Prefers Street Cars to Bus System.

Retention of the present street car service now available to Takoma Park (Md.) will be advocated by the Takoma Park Chamber of Commerce, it was voted this week.

The chamber took action in this respect following information that a movement to abolish the trolley service in place of a bus system was now under way in other quarters.

At its last meeting the chamber voted to urge the District Commissioners to continue the street-lighting system along Rittenhouse and Cedar streets to Fifth street. A stop light at the corner of Fourth and Cedar streets also will be sought.

The meeting was held following a joint meeting with the Takoma Park Lions Club, at which time District Governor George Danby, of Newark, Del., was the guest speaker. A charity night will be held in the near future, it was announced.

Dr. Mark Welsh Heads Kiwanis

Succeeds Arthur C. Keefer in Prince Georges Club Presidency.

Dr. Mark F. Welsh, of College Park, inspector in charge of the Maryland live stock sanitary service, last night was unanimously elected president of the Kiwanis Club of Prince Georges County (Md.) for the year beginning January 1 at a dinner meeting at Beaver Dam Country Club.

Welsh, former first vice president, succeeds Arthur C. Keefer, of Mount Rainier. The club was organized during the past year.

Dr. John T. Maloney, of Cheverly, was elected without opposition as first vice president. John S. White, of Colmar Manor, was chosen second vice president over Harry D. Eisenhauer, of University Park. Dr. W. Allen Griffith, of Berwyn, was unanimously reelected treasurer. A secretary is to be appointed.

For the board of directors, the following were elected:

E. G. Duncan, District Heights; Harry D. Eisenhauer, University Park; Maj. Alvan C. Gillem, jr., College Park; Prof. Jacob E. Metzger, Riverdale; J. Walter Richards, Hyattsville; C. M. Shepperson, University Park; George T. Willingmyre, Hollywood, and Bert H. Wise, Cheverly.

Russell Sued For Divorce; Morals Cited

Champion of Companionate Marriage Absent at Hearing.

London, Nov. 15 (AP).—Bertrand Russell, one of the world's leading advocates of companionate marriage, failed to appear in court today to contest the divorce suit brought by his wife, Countess Russell.

The countess—some of whose views on marriage are just as striking as her husband's—charged Russell was guilty of immoral conduct in 1933 shortly after both signed a document absolving each other from all past indiscretions.

The first day's hearing, over which Sir Boyd Merriman presided, revealed that the case hinges largely on the court's attitude toward the contention submitted on behalf of the countess that the court should not go behind a clause in their deed of separation which condoned any matrimonial offenses committed by either party before the date of the deed.

Sir Boyd, who postponed action when the case first came before him July 26 until the King's proctor should have opportunity to "consider the whole matter with a view of assisting the court," questioned that contention today.

He asked the countess whether she was not saying "this mutual condonation prevents any inquiry as to whether my indiscretions, which I admit and into which there is to be no inquiry because my husband has condoned it, was the cause of the indiscretion in 1933."

The proctor, who appears in divorce probate hearings where collusion is suspected or apprehended, argued that the condoning clause in the deed of separation was not operative to prevent the petitioner giving the court all the material which it was under statutory duty to obtain.

Lusk Cites Rise In Capital Taxes

Washingtonians Must Pay $35,000,000 for Year, He Says.

During the fiscal year which ends June 30, 1935, Washingtonians will pay over $35,000,000 to carry on the municipal government, Rufus S. Lusk, secretary of the Washington Taxpayers' Protective Association told the Federation of Business Men's Associations at a meeting last night in the Lafayette Hotel.

"If we assume that every man, woman and child, including 80,000 on relief, has a net income of $500 during the year, $70 or 14.1 per cent will go for taxes," said Mr. Lusk.

Fifteen years ago, according to Mr. Lusk, Washingtonians paid about $22 a year to run the city, and 25 years ago it was $17.

"The salary roll alone is $21,000,000," asserted Mr. Lusk, "and this almost equals the total expense of the District of Columbia in 1920."

The present contract, under which the several grades of fire cured, flue cured, burley and Maryland types are deliverable, will continue as heretofore.

Sasscer-Melvin Battle Impends

Contest Due for Presidency of the State Senate in Maryland.

Annapolis, Nov. 15 (Spl.).—State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, Prince Georges County, generally regarded by Democratic leaders as the choice for president of the body, bids fair to face opposition when the General Assembly convenes in January, it developed today.

Ridgely P. Melvin, recently re-elected for another term from Anne Arundel County, has been indorsed for the post by the State Central Committee of the county, and copies of resolutions setting forth his qualifications have been sent to every Senator in the State. The local committee says that the Anne Arundel Senator has a record "second to none" among members of the general assembly.

Senator Melvin at one time was mentioned as a candidate for Governor during the late September primaries, but declined to consider tenders, having committed himself to Gov. Ritchie's candidacy for a fifth term.

Dedication Set At Playground In Kenilworth

Major Brown and District Heads to Be Guests at Fete Tonight.

With Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, and Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen, George Allen and Daniel I. Sultan guests of honor, the new Kenilworth Playground, on the site of old Kenilworth School, will be dedicated today at 8 p. m.

Under the auspices of the District Department of Playgrounds, the project has been financed by CWA and EWA funds.

Carol Robb, engineer of the playground department, has been in direct charge of remodeling the old school building. On the top floor of the structure is an auditorium large enough to seat 200. In the rear of the auditorium is a workshop, in which such activities as model aircraft making and other handicraft work may be carried on.

A game room for boys and an activity room for girls are on he first floor. Showers have been installed, and a gas range has been donated, so that facilities will be available for cooking full course dinners.

The department of playgrounds has installed a library and stocked it with a large number of books. A worker, Mrs. Elizabeth Bell, of the playground staff, has been assigned to duty there.

A few years ago the school was abandoned and the second and third stories torn down. Miss Sibyl Baker, director of playgrounds, requested that the building be turned over to her department, and this was done in December, 1933.

Immediately the CWA project submitted by Miss Baker was approved and work was begun. Last January Miss Baker met with a group of citizens, and the Kenilworth Recreation Council was formed to cooperate with the playground department.

Organizations which will use the building as a meeting place are the Kenilworth Citizens Association, the Ladies Guild, Boys Athletic Club, Junior Order of Mechanics, Daughters of America, Girl Scouts, P-T. A., Police Boys Club, Model Aircraft Club and the Girls Athletic Club.

Carliner Back, Makes Pledge

Student Gives Promise Not to Incite Others to Riotous Conduct.

On his written promise "to refrain from inciting students to riot or disorderly conduct," David Carliner, McKinley High School senior, was allowed to return to classes yesterday.

Carliner was suspended Tuesday by Principal Frank C. Daniel for allegedly urging a student strike in protest to the Board of Education's approval of cancellation of the high school football schedule.

Previously Carliner had declined to promise abstinence from student agitation as a condition of his readmission to school, asserting that to do so would be to violate principles of "free speech and individual right."

Carliner, it was learned, inquired at the Community Center Department about use of Central High School auditorium for a student mass meeting Friday night. He took an application blank, but late yesterday had not returned it.

FRANKFORT DISTILLERIES OF KENTUCKY & MARYLAND

Maryland Club New Ballroom Nearly Ready

Opening Set for Nov. 28; Microphones Stir Much Interest.

By Kay Ware.

Maryland Club Gardens' new ballroom is nearly finished. The walls are covered with aluminum, the wall puppet show is rigged up so it will move, the crystal bar is near completion, and the big opening date is set for Wednesday, November 28.

The microphone system, with the loud speakers set in the wall, is creating a stir. It is so well constructed that music can be heard in every corner of the room, even above the conversation and laughter of guests. To help the sound, there's a canopy like affair over the orchestra box that throws the music forward.

A new floor show for the opening will be announced later. At present Janis and Jeanette, dance team, continue to draw applause.

Once again, an amusement spot calls itself "continental." This time Club Troika presents a lobby decorated with modern murals, a club room after the fashion of Imperial Russia with heavy tapestries, indirect lighting and all the comforts that were Russia's before the Five Year Plan.

As for the floor show Gregory Dneistroff, master of ceremonies, is a movie character actor. His manner of presenting the acts is a cross between P. T. Barnum and Rasputin. He wears a Russian cossack costume, and you know how glamorous they are.

The Russian gypsy trio is headed by Mme. Achmatova, starred in original cast of "Grand Hotel," "One Night of Love" and is a granddaughter of H. Sienkiewicz, author of "Quo Vadis."

Boris Yourlo does a whirlwind dance and spins to the rhythm of a swinging sword nearly as large as he. Then comes Ethel Pastor, gypsy singer, a peasant skit by Dneistroff, and a finale of the entire company and Matt Windsor's musicians.

The nice elderly gentleman with the mischievous gleam in his eyes spent a lot of time drawing pictures in the Willard's bamboo room the other day. Contrary to what might be expected, he wasn't sketching the guests, but was keeping up with his daily work, and "Keeping Up With the Joneses." Right. it was Pop Momand, the father of the famous strip.

John Slaughter, Fenton Froom, Ernestine Gardner, and the musicians, are often lauded by celebrities. Among these: Walter Johnson, Muddy Rogers and Jeannie Lang.

Shoreham gossip: Mr. and Mrs. Rafael Lopez de Onate (Mrs. Onate was Ellen McAdoo) seen dining in ballroom . . . Julianne Johnson, Hollywood actress, starring with Rocky Twins, has the smallest ash tray on record. About the size of a thimble, she carries it around with her between rehearsals . . . Rocky Twins hat number very good . . . Also "Proximity."

Trudy Malina, John Hale's singing partner, has fine voice and Paris gowns . . . More beauty added by Emily Von Losen, dancer.

Mayflower lounge's social list: Charles Stewart, import-export banker; Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall; Franklin K. Lane, jr., Albert Berres, last two of Aviation Board.

Always a celebrity there. Always a socialite. Often some of the town's musicians stop in to watch their friends work.

Alexandria may have been considered a sleepy town, but its eyes are wide open as far as the George Mason Hotel is concerned. Opening set for November 28, reservations almost completely filled, floor has been laid this week, floor show is lined up, favors are ready for guests, surprise acts planned——

The announcements are original. Written in the old-fashioned style, with much use of "ye," printed in old-fashioned type with curly letters, they are an excellent incentive.

Floor show—Helen Ault, radio singer; Susan Hall and Walter Doe, local dance team; Brooke Johns, Estelle Hunt Dean, local singer; Dan Hollenga will be master of ceremonies.

So they've changed the names of those Madrillon boys again. They call themselves the "Three Southern Accents," because, as they say, "it suits us." They're all from Carolina. However, since things go definitely Spanish at Peter Borras' place, they're learning the "Cockroach" number and will be called the "Three Hot Tamales." Or is it all just a rumor.

Leon Brusiloff pleases by playing request numbers. Jack Schaeffer clowns, and Ray Donahue sings in a serious manner. By the way, somebody got out the story that Jack was leaving the Madrillon. The management insists that such it not the case, but that "Annie's Sister Fanny" and "The Tattooed Lady" continue to be a part of the show.

Showboat is as nautical as the name suggests. With little stretch of the imagination you could pretend you were on shipboard with salt air in your face, and clams in your soup.

Incidentally, the dinners there are very good considering the price.

Carleton is modernism's last word. Even to the neon light fireplace, the blue walls, the red and white chairs, the gold trimmings, the bar that looks slightly like an automat.

Also, modernism flows over the bar, where Mixologist Meyer knows what to mix and how to mix it.

Tons of Food Banish Hunger Of Needy Pupils in Capital

Mrs. Ansley Is Directing Work Which Feeds Nearly 7,000.

What would you do if you had to provide lunches for 6,937 hungry and needy school children five days out of every week?

If you were wise, you'd see Mrs. Katherine M. Ansley at the old Wisconsin Avenue Manual Training School.

As director of the District school lunch kitchen she commands a force of 50 emergency relief workers who distribute a hot dish, sandwiches, milk and fruit to children from the first to the sixth grades in 91 public and parochial schools.

Her food orders for one month read like the giant's menu in the Jack-and-the-Beanstalk story: Milk, 85,000 quarts; bananas, 28,000 pounds; oranges, 48,000 pounds; bread, 18,000 pounds; apples, 18,000 pounds; soup meat, 6,000 pounds; potatoes, 5,000 pounds, and so on, in similar proportions, for butter, jam, cheese, vegetables and other staples.

Seven Trucks Utilized.

Seven delivery trucks travel 200 miles a day to leave the seamless aluminum cans of steaming hot beef broth or macaroni, the paper bags full of sandwiches and the fruit. The milk is delivered direct from the dairies to the schools. And Mrs. Ansley knows her children; in each bag of sandwiches goes an allotment of one sandwich per child, plus one extra for the boy or girl with the particularly gnawing appetitie.

Principals and teachers throughout the elementary schools recommend pupils for these lunches after investigation into home conditions. Children thus nourished come from families either on relief rolls or on the border line of need.

Emergency workers known as housekeepers receive the day's ration in each school where class rooms and empty basement space have been commandeered for the children's lunchrooms. Tables and benches constructed by the works division of the Emergency Relief Department are set up in these temporary restaurants, while a teacher supervises the distribution of the soup, bread and butter (sometimes jam or peanut butter), the fresh fruit and bottles of Grade A milk served with straws. The housekeeper cleans up after the children are finished, scalding all dishes before use the next day.

Children Receive Training.

And food isn't all the children get. Training in table manners, leadership in thanksgiving prayer and singing, not to mention the education in proper diet standards, are not the least of the incidental benefits afforded them.

The free lunches, first served in March, 1933, started with 4,500 children on the lists, reached a peak of 7,200 last year and this week are being served to nearly 7,000. As the winter progresses more children will receive health-giving, body-building food, it is expected.

Sixteen cooks in white caps and dresses form the shock troops of the school luncheon brigade in the Wisconsin avenue kitchens.

Each is charged with the preparation of one 30-gallon kettle, into which pour correct proportions of carrots, cabbage, onions, corn, tomatoes and beef stock—480 gallons of hot food a day.

At 6 o'clock every morning the kettles start brewing; the sandwich makers switch on their electric butter creamers; the fruit crew divides the day's supply into the proper allotment for each school. And by 10 a. m. the first trucks are on their way to the most distant schools, ready for the hungry children at noon.

50 Employed in Task.

Direct employment is given at least 50 men and women; health and strength are being built up in nearly 7,000 children, and satisfaction comes to the school authorities who see not only the weight and height charts rising, but the classroom grades and general deportment avorages as well.

And greater than all these immediate advantages, the deeper significance of the work, as summarized by Mrs. Ansley, must not be forgotten. For, as she explains:

"These special health safeguards are minimizing the otherwise debilitating effects of this period of economic stress on the children who will comprise the citizens of America in the next generaton."

'Tiny' Scoring Huge Success At Shoreham

Singer Traveling Incognito Has Original Technique on Baby Piano.

"Tiny" leads a double life. On one side he sings his songs and pardoies at the Shoreham Lounge, on the other he is secretive. It is hinted his incognito has something to do with a profession (other than singing), but he won't tell.

What he will tell is the story of his night life, how he got into the business, the friends he has made, the songs he writes for these friends and as many anecdotes as you have time for. They are funny, these stories, and you'll laugh until he stops.

For instance, his first job. He had written some songs for a team at Barney Gallant's night club in New York. Tiny made it a habit to drop in and see how the shows were going.

Signed Fat Checks.

"Once Barney asked me to sing," says Tiny. "So I did, and Barney didn't have the heart to make me pay the bill. I asked all my friends around from time to time, so Barney decided that it would be more economical to put me on salary.

"He did. The first week I was on salary I owed him $10. It was a good salary too."

So he continued to sing at various places in New York. He wrote songs for Eddie Davis, sang them for Peter Arno, Walter Winchell, Rudy Vallee and a long list of other celebrities.

"Then my uncle came along," Tiny grinned. "He didn't like my racket and decided to show me up. He threw a party, told some one to dig up the highest paid entertainer in New York. I was called, and I came around.

"Uncle's scheme didn't work."

Tiny makes it plain that he's a very special type of singer. He writes his own arrangements, and if some one asks him to sing, "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes," he has to say, "Sorry, but perhaps you'll like one of my own songs?"

His own songs, he explains, are smart. And a trifle naughty. But always subtle.

"I'm really a very pure soul," he says, "and am often genuinely shocked at the interpretations people read into my stuff.

Words Often Stolen.

"Yes, sometimes other singers try to steal my words. Once in a New York club I saw an uptown singer come in with a stenographer. So I sang very slowly, repeating lines and asking, 'Did you get that?' or 'That word was purloin-ed,' till the singer and stenographer left in a hurry and the whole house was roaring. They loved it.

"Once I ran a night club in Lake Placid. It was fun. My family came up to see me once, saw the second largest neon sign in the place labeling my club, and turned around and went home. I don't think they liked the sign. They didn't even say hello to me."

At the Shoreham, Tiny (Incidentally he has another name, but leaving it off is part of his incognito) wheels a little piano to the tables and puts on a private concert. The piano is about half Tiny's size, and the team is fine. Ask him to sing his version of "Jack and Jill," or the English song, "That's How I Like 'Em."

And He's Called Tiny!

Underwood & Underwood.

Huntsman Injured When Horse Falls

Middleburg, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—John Riticor, prominent Loudoun County horseman living near Oatlands, was injured this morning while riding in the field with the Middleburg hunt. Riticor was thrown from his horse when the mount fell at a jump. The horse rolled on him, according to reports, crushing his collar bone and inflicting other injuries, the extent of which have not been determined.

He was taken to the Loudoun County Hospital.

The meet this morning was from Mount Zion Church, near Aldie, and only a small field followed the hounds.

Couple Sail Tomorrow for Honeymoon in Paris.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Capital society remembers for a long time those who have been associated with Washington, and among those most pleasantly remembered are the former United States Ambassador to Germany and Mrs. James W. Gerard.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerard are now living in New York, and their home on Fifth avenue was the scene of an interesting wedding Wednesday when Miss Hannah-Lee Sherman, only daughter of Mrs. Charles M. Sherman, of New York, and the late Mr. Sherman, became the bride of State Senator Walter Watson Stokes, of Woodside Hall, Cooperstown, N. Y.

Bride Wears White Satin.

The bride was given in marriage by her cousin, Mr. P. Tecumseh Sherman, only surviving son of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman. She wore a gown of white satin fashioned with a long train. The sleeves were embroidered with pearls and her tulle veil was draped from a coronet of old lace. She carried a bouquet of white orchids.

Mr. Walter Watson Stokes, jr., was best man for his father.

A reception and breakfast followed the ceremony. Senator and Mrs. Stokes will sail tomorrow for Europe to pass a month in Paris, returning for Christmas. They will have a house in Albany for the session of the Legislature, and the Stokes residence in Cooperstown will be their home.

Among the wedding guests were Mrs. Walter W. Stokes, jr., daughter-in-law of the bridegroom; Mrs. John Gordon Logan, sister of the bridegroom; Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan E. Wing, jr., Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gassaway Davis 3d, Mrs. Fair Vanderbilt, Mrs. Henry Reese Hoyt and Mrs. Fitch Gilbert, jr.

Mrs. Samuel Reber and Lieut. Miles Reber, U. S. A., Mr. and Mrs. William von Rath and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hoffman also were among the guests.

Related to Statesmen.

The bride is a grandniece of the late Senator John Sherman, who was Secretary of the Treasury under President Rutherford B. Hayes, and Secretary of State under President William McKinley. Her maternal grandfather was Gen. J. J. Bartlett, who served in the Civil War, became Minister to Norway and Sweden and was Deputy Commissioner of Pensions under President Grover Cleveland.

She is a first cousin of Mrs. Sidney Fish, of East Hampton, Long Island, and California, and Miss Mary Hoyt Wiborg, of New York. She attended the Brearley School, studied for a year in Paris and is a member of the Junior League and the River Club.

Her brothers are Mr. Hoyt Sherman, who is with an oil company in Maracaibo, Venezuela, and Lieut. John Bartlett Sherman, U. S. A., of Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. Stokes is a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Stokes, of New York. He is a graduate of the Hill School and attended Yale, class of 1903. He is a member of the Union, Racquet and Tennis, Turf and Field Clubs and the Fort Orange Club of Albany.

Louise Waller Makes Her Bow At a Luncheon

Debut Party Is Held in Chinese Room of the Mayflower.

The Chinese Room of the Mayflower Hotel was the scene of the debut luncheon, yesterday, of Miss Louise Waller, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Absolom Waller. Miss Waller wore a becoming tunic frock of black and green, the tunic of heavy green crepe, made with a draped neck and unique belt which ended in tubular fringe with metal tips. Her skirt was of black crepe. The little black velvet hat, made on cossack style, had a small nose veil. On her left shoulder, Miss Waller wore a spray of gardenias. Mrs. Waller was attired in black satin with a smart little turban to match. As the only touch of color in her dark ensemble, Mrs. Waller added a handsome peacock pin of emeralds and sapphires.

Table Arranged in Square.

The luncheon table, arranged in a large square, was decorated in autumn colors. In the center of each side there was a large centerpiece of yellow and bronze chrysanthemums, red roses and orange freesia, continuing to the ends of the tables and artistically scattered about the silver holders, which contained yellow tapers, were crisp scarlet and brown oak leaves.

An attractive note of the luncheon that was quite appropriate for the young debutante and her sister buds was the service of the dessert. The lights were dimmed and the waiters marched in, each carrying aloft a tray, on which there was a huge illuminated crystal heart surrounded by the creams.

Lists of Guests.

The guests included Miss Christine Blair Long, daughter of the United States Ambassador to Italy, and Mrs. Breckinridge Long; Princess Vandipya Devakula, daughter of the Minister of Siam, and Princess Damras; Mlle. Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It

DEAR DIARY:

I saw Mathilde Rodger yesterday. She was wearing a MOST unusual chapeau of black crocheted silk. It sort of fitted her head, then continued on up a la skyscraper. Suddenly it flared out in a most surprising manner. Mathilde chuckled and her large eyes sparkled as she deftly patted it this way and that for different effects—while explaining that she got it to carry either eggs or ideas around in.

Mary Winifred Brown, who delights in quoting Mad Peter and his pet hates, is one of the eight young persons who could explain the mysterious rustling flutter of slippery programs that quietly and most distractingly slithered down from the balcony during the breath-taking scene of "A Murder Has Been Arranged."

That play, by the way, is no end good and the acting is even better. The only thing is that if it gets about how really good it is, the play, scenery and, of course, actors may go on a tour, meaning that we would lose Marie McIntyre, and that would not do at all, even for a short time.

Indians Are Being Rehabilitated Through the Native 'CCC' Camps

Bureau Editor Outlines Work Done for Them

Population of Red Men Is Steadily Increasing, Says Miss Roberts.

By Elizabeth Perrow.

PICTURED as the Vanishing American, the feathers in his war bonnet drooping, his shoulders sagging, the Indian has inspired many a romantic sigh in the breast of the white man.

"But we can't think of Indians as members of a vanishing race, and then ignore them," Miss Mary Carter Roberts, of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, said yesterday. "Our Indian population is steadily increasing, and we have to provide for these people."

Similar to CCC Camps.

"These camps," she explained, "are similar to the CCC camps. But the workers may be of all ages, and the man who gets a job in one of them can take his family to the camp with him. Whenever there is any social service work that the Indians can do they are given the jobs. And they are given responsible positions in the camps as soon as they are ready for them. Whenever there is any work women can do they are also given jobs."

The problem of the unemployed Indian is especially hard to solve because he is fitted for nothing but unskilled labor, Miss Roberts pointed out.

"Although many people believe Indians are lazy," she said, "three of them applied for every available job at the conservation camps. And they are doing excellent work in forestry conservation. The women are just as eager to work as the men. And one Indian woman, who has never been outside the reservation, has become a real leader among the other women. She travels from one camp to another and teaches the Indian women to sew, to make quilts, to embroider. They respect her and work for her. Under her supervision they are learning to keep themselves and their houses clean and to care for their children in a scientific manner.

Encourage Indians to Write.

"This woman recently wrote an article for our magazine. We published it just as she wrote it. We are trying to build up an Indian public for our magazine and we encourage contributions from Indians. We are just as interested in the articles written by the poorly-educated Indians as the ones by the college graduates."

Contrary to the general belief that Indians are "rich," they are extremely poor, Miss Roberts said.

"The death rate is twice as high among Indians as white people," that is because they have almost no money. They can't buy the right food; haven't even the money to keep clean. We speak of dirty Indians. How can they be anything else, living as they do?

"Their houses are almost all falling down. They patch them up with old tin cans, pieces of board—anything to keep out the cold. Many of them have been known to freeze to death. You can hardly expect an Indian to want to put cretonne curtains at the window when the whole side of one wall is window."

Indians on Increase in U. S.

The Indian population in this country is steadily increasing, Miss Roberts pointed out, despite the high death rate and small size of the average family.

"The number of Indians has increased 30 per cent since the beginning of the century," she said. "And the Indians are becoming more and more progressive. They want to learn things, to take their part in the work of the country. Last year Congress passed a bill which would give the Indians more responsibility, but provided that the Indians were to vote on it before it went through. And of the thirty-two tribes that have voted on it, thirty-one have passed it with a big majority.

"They were interested in the bill, and intelligent in their discussion of it. Last summer I was in a camp in the North Woods, which was miles from civilization. And when I went in there Indians from camps miles away had gathered to discuss the bill.

Work Given Native Artists.

"There was nothing of a social nature in the meeting. They came to study the bill and discuss it, and when that was done, they went home.

"The conservation camps have provided work for the Indian artists and skilled workers as well as for the laborers. Indian textile workers, weavers and artists often work in the camps. One Indian who was a sand painter is doing some lovely murals for the science camp walls. Indians who have the necessary training are given positions in the Indian office here in Washington.

"One of the most interesting Indians we have working for us is literally the last of the Mohicans. Her name is Gladys Tantaquidgeon, and she is a direct descendent of the hero of Cooper's famous novel. She is working in New England trying to find some of the lost tribes of Indians who are in that part of the country. We also have some Indian girls doing public health nursing and teaching. We hope in time to find Indians capable of conducting all their own affairs."

Underwood & Underwood.

Constructive work being done at Indian Conservation Camps—where men save the forests while women learn the domestic arts—is told in the pages of "Indians at Work," a magazine edited by Miss Mary Carter Roberts, shown above.

Mothers Chiefly Responsible For Spectacular Weddings; Chinese Have Good Suggestion

By Malvina Lindsay
(Woman's Page Editor).

NOW THAT the Princess Marina has definitely decided to use the word "obey" in her marriage ceremony, the public can shift its concern to the question of whether or not she will get a mink coat as a wedding present.

• • • •

It seems only yesterday that the world was equally excited over the nuptials of Leopold and Astrid of Belgium, and, to use a more recent example, those of John Jacob Astor 3d and Ellen Tucker French. Thus, seemingly, is borne out the adage that all the world loves a lover—or, perhaps, a wedding.

• • • •

It might be more truthfully said that all the world loves a circus, particularly a matrimonial one. The wide publicity, the vulgar curiosity and the rowdyism that frequently attend the weddings of the great and even those of the obscure bear evidence that the modern wedding, no more than the modern funeral, has not taken on many of the elements of civilization.

WOMEN ARE primarily to blame for this. If it were not for women, mothers particularly, there probably would be no wedding fanfare—no showers, loot exhibits, ushers and bridesmaids, stag dinners, rice throwing, charivaris and buffoonery. Weddings might be conducted in privacy, quietude and dignity; might be shorn of their ostentation and paganism.

• • • •

Probably if it were not for women's exhibitionism, the curtain might be lowered on a human being's life with the simplicity and majesty of Greek tragedy. Those in charge of the Von Hindenburg obsequies may have felt something like this when they decreed that only men should attend the last rites for the aged warrior and that the sublimity of the event should not be marred by a woman's sob.

• • • •

Aside from custom, it is a pathetic desire to escape from humdrum living that causes human beings to dramatize their most profound experiences, to attempt to turn them into pageants or spectacles. It is a truism that the more obscure the person, the more satisfaction is derived from an ostentatious wedding or funeral. But even the wealthy, those into whose daily lives come color and excitement, can not resist going before the footlights in their big moments.

ROYALTY, of course, must, as part of its job, play its private life on a public stage. And no doubt it is too much to expect of human nature anywhere that it should dispense entirely with tribal hocus-pocus. But in the course of 6,000, or 6,000,000—or however many years it has been since humanity left the jungle—it does seem that some advance might have been made in social customs commensurate with that in science and the arts.

• • • •

A ray of light, however, comes from China. The Association for Marriage Reforms of that country now plans to do something to eliminate the family debt situation resulting from weddings. It has resolved that no wedding gift shall cost more than $1 and that wedding banquets shall not cost more than $4 for each table of eight guests. It has further resolved that no bands or firecrackers shall be used at weddings and that wedding parties must leave the bridal couple alone before midnight.

• • • •

Here is a reform that might have some practical and artistic value. Club women of this country in search of a cause could not do better than to investigate it. Such a movement might mark a national step forward out of social adolescence.

Strictly Speaking

Pronounce These.

1. Camembert (cheese).
2. Diderot (French philosopher).
3. Papyrus.
4. Requital.
5. Turgenev (Russian novelist).

Check Here.

1. Ka-mahn-BAIR (to rhyme with "there").
2. Deed-Ro.
3. Pa-PIE-rus, not PAP-ir-us.
4. Re-KWI-tal. (The second syllable rhymes with "eye").
5. Toor-GEN-yef (the "g" is hard and the second syllable rhymes with "pen.") The name, spelled 15 different ways, is pronounced in varied fashions, but the foregoing pronunciation is the one generally accepted.

Bangs Are in Style.

An increasing number of women wearing center parts is observed. This season's way of combing the top hair back and gracing the sides with slanting upward curls is more easily worn than the center part with the side hair combed severely downward and then back.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

White Collar Class Decimated by Infidelities, Says Older Woman.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH:

For the sake of my grown-up and married children I want to take exception to part of your reply to "Stranger" in your column of November 9. You do not suggest it, but the inamorata is the intruder, the home wrecker, willing to take another woman's husband and deprive three children of their father.

• • • •

She might not want to steal the family silver, yet how much less a crime that would be! Then, too, the putting away of an illicit love is not "a sacrifice." A sacrifice is the offering up of a thing or person belonging to us.

• • • •

"Stranger's" predicament is that he does not know whether he can divorce his wife; but he knows that in trying he can offend her, and may, in a way, find himself estranged without attaining his objective of a divorce. This is bothering him more than any consideration for his children. Men are like that, and if 40 men wrote you, they would all show a strain of the same caution.

• • • •

You have given this man an "out", so he will probably grab it with one hand, adjusting his halo with the other. Possibly he will write and tell you about it.

• • • •

I am not young any more and I have seen a lot of men and women. When decency and loyalty are gone from this country there will be nothing left, except what the children of foreigners can make of it. The white-collar class is being decimated because wives can not trust their husbands for the protection and and loyalty necessary to bring up even small families.

ANONYMOUS SECOND.

Moral Policing Futile

DEAR ANONYMOUS SECOND: Do you feel, because I did not lay down arbitrary rules of conduct for "Stranger," but told him instead, that character, in it's definition of moral excellence, is an absolute essential in leading a life of value either to the individual or society, and that such character precludes the shedding of old responsibilities when the appeal of novelty has worn off, that I gave him an "out"?

• • • •

Or when I told him it would require the hedonist's philosophy to walk roughshod and unhearing over the dependent wife, the defenceless children, to take the woman he loves?

Or when I suggested he would be pandering to weakness of character, rather than developing strength, in placing personal desire above moral duty?

• • • •

If you draw your deduction from these and similar premises, I'm afraid we don't speak the same language.

You say: "A sacrifice is the offerjng up of a thing or a person belonging to us. The putting away of illicit love is not 'a sacrifice.'"

• • • •

Why not? Love—in its best sense the highest, most selfless expression of personality of which the human being is capable—is a vital personal possession. And where it's mutually recognized existence comes into direct conflict with prior responsibilities and duties, surely it is no abuse of the English language to speak of "sacrificing" it's emotional claims in favor of others involving duty and honor

• • • •

As for "Stranger's" perplexity being rooted in self-interest, rather than a desire to play fairly, that is entirely a matter of personal opinion, always colored by the bias of the one who delivers it. I choose to think the best of the human being.

• • • •

As for the white collar class being decimated because wives can not trust husbands for the protection and loyalty necessary to bring up even small families, I think we must accept the fact that, even so, such protection and loyalty can not be successfully enforced from without; by self-constituted moral policemen; but rather from a growing social recognition of the fact that in the scales of spiritual justice, the individual's duties outweight his desires.

M. H.

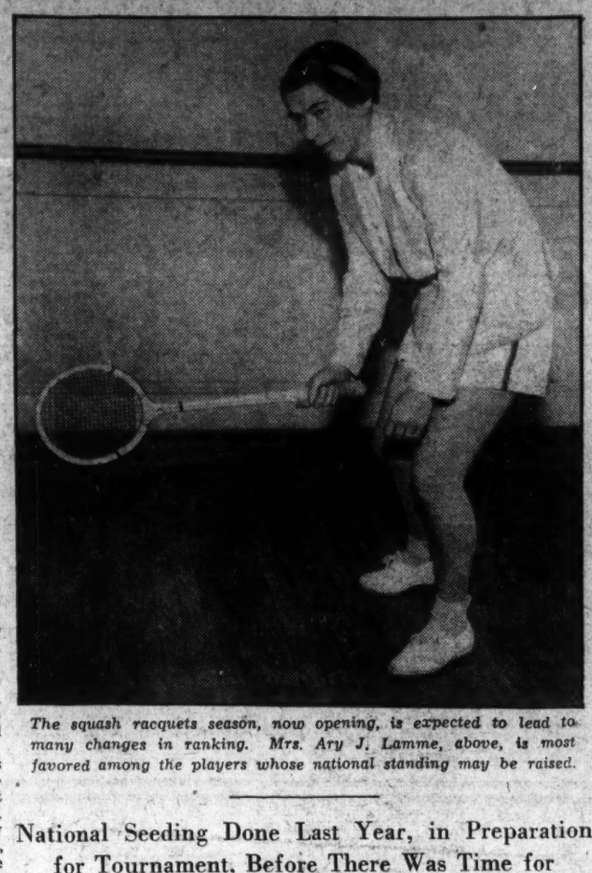
1934 Squash Ratings Show Wide Variation



The squash racquets season, now opening, is expected to lead to many changes in ranking. Mrs. Ary J. Lamme, above, is most favored among the players whose national standing may be raised.

National Seeding Done Last Year, in Preparation for Tournament, Before There Was Time for Players to Show Best Form.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

THE upside-down schedule of squash racquets, last year, due to the American team's trip to England for the Wolfe-Noel Cup and the English championships, caused an unusual situation in the national seedings. This will have its aftermath this season.

The national tournament was scheduled unusually early in the season, last year, so that it would be completed before the team sailed. National seeding, therefore was done, in preparation for the national tournament, before there was time for the players to show their best form.

The season's practice, and in the case of those who went abroad, the polish gained by playing against the English made a definite improvement in many players' ability. This rise in grade of play, and the comparative changes of rating among the players, clearly showed in tournaments at the end of the season, but naturally does not check with the earlier ratings. The 1934 official ratings should show a wide variation from those of last year.

Mrs. Ary J. Lamme, of Rye, N. Y., seeded fifth in National placement last year, has shown the strongest bid for higher ranking. Mrs. Lamme and the first and second seeded players, Mrs. William F. Howe, jr., of Boston, and Anne Page, of Philadelphia, were the only members of the American team who were able to get to the quarter-finals in the English championship. If Mrs. Lamme maintains the level of play she reached in England and in tournaments after the return to America, she has high chances of being seeded third instead of fifth.

In the Metropolitan Championship, after their return, Mrs. Lamme defeated Mrs. H. Stuart Green, of Tarrytown, defending champion, who was seeded third nationally. With Margaret Bostwick, a comparatively inexperienced player, as partner, she defeated Miss Page and Mrs. Crawford C. Madeira, of Philadelphia, formerly rated second in the country, to win the New York State doubles championship.

Another player who is in line for a change of place, by reason of her excellent play last season, is Marguerite Anderson, Plainfield, N. J., seeded sixth. A younger player who has not yet reached the level of the seeded list of eight, Eileen Beresford, of Short Hills, N. J., topped a successful season by defeating Mrs. Madeira to win the Ardsley invitation tournament, and bears watching.

Star Says Clothes Must Portray Action

Hollywood, Calif., Nov. 15 (AP).—Clothes should portray woman in motion, says Gloria Swanson. Otherwise they fail in their purpose.

"This seeason's clothes are at their very best in action," says Gloria. "Swinging capes, bouffant skirts, sweeping trains and slit skirts, rippling fur collars, even the dramatic new coiffures suit the modern woman whose life is swift and sure in tempo."

Savant Urges Restraint on Mother Love

Wrecks More Homes Than Indifference or Hate, Educator Says.

FIRM IN the conviction that love is a greater homewrecker than either indifference or hate, Hughes Mearns, author, lecturer and professor of education at New York University, declares himself in favor of a closed season for the tender passion. With the query "Do you wish to hold your children's love?" addressed to the readers of the November issue of the Parents' Magazine, Prof. Mearns follows with what he believes is the only possible right answer.

"Don't love your children all the time. Each day reserve a time when you will resolve neither to love them nor to exact love from them. This will be their leisure period. Keep out of it!"

Love Can Be a Tyrant.

The observant professor admits that love can be a terrible tyrant and hits mother love a blow in the solar plexus by accusing it of being back of most of the disagreeable things that happen in households. Says he:

"Mothers are practicing love from the time they get up until the last light is turned out at night. Eventually they become experts. No one can escape their love without leaving the house. Husbands go off to lodges; children beg to visit somebody else and if forbidden, by love, go and visit anyway and stay out until the last horn blows, knowing that when they come home they will be loved in a high pitched voice."

The professor, however, holds no brief for love that is soft and gentle.

Suggestions for Parents.

"One may fight a lusty lover and come out of it released," he said. "But the dove-like ones paralyze every outlet of individuality." Then that those who love well may learn to love wisely also, Prof. Mearns offers parents several suggestions for making the perfect adjustment:

"Love just enough to make it a pleasant experience for youth, a thing to be remembered without the least hint of annoyance. Trust children, let them go their own way, often even when you do not wholly agree with them; let them come and go without too persistent questioning; let them waste their time occasionally, read foolish books, and play silly games.

Coffee Maker Of All Glass Supplants Pot

Vase-Shaped Device Has Electric Grill With Three Controls.

By Katherine Smith.

SOMETHING new in coffee makers. This time it's a vase-shaped glass pot, with a bowl-like funnel that fits into the top, and a little electric grill. The outfit is all glass; no metal to make the coffee 'taste," and the decanter for serving, with its black handle and black and chromium strip-ings, is far more attractive than the old-fashioned pot.

You fill the decanter with hot water, insert the funnel and pour your coffee into the upper bowl. Set it on your table on the electric grill, wait 50 seconds and your coffee is clear, hot and ready to pour. The electric plug has three-temperature control, so you can make your coffee at the high heat and keep it hot at the low.

Another thing: your coffee is as good a day after it is made as when first brewed. Fit an ordinary cork into the decanter; heat it when you want to drink it. In this way, there is no waste; with other pots it often is necessary to throw away that last cup.

If you don't believe the coffee is good, sample a cup yourself. A demonstrator will tell you all about it, and serve you a cupful besides.

For a Dark Corner.

The latest in lamps is a little drum, red and blue, with a light inside that shines through the diaphragms, or whatever they call that skin stretched across the ends. The glass is frosted, so the light is most appropriate as a night light, or a soft illumination for a dark corner.

Have you seen those lovely colored lame collars? They come in blue and peach, are softly draped or severely tailored; styles suited for any dress or any occasion.

If you feel that the gold lame is too bright for your style of beauty, the pastel shades might just fill the bill.

Very special accessory for the guest room: a box containing several shades of guest puffs and six shades of powder, including that light lavender that is so flattering for evening.

A perfect hostess will have one of these boxes handy for the use of guests whose complexions don't match hers. After all, if she uses peach-colored powder, and her boss' wife uses rachel, embarrassment might result from the invitation, "You'll find my powder on the dressing table."

Best of all, this box, complete, is only $1.95.

The trouble with most evening wraps is that they aren't made for freezing weather. No matter how well-lined your velvet cape may be, winter breezes are bound to sweep through. What you'll need is a soft, wool shoulder cape to slip around you under your wrap.

Another thing, you'll find these capes useful around the house when you can't regulate the draughts. They come in several combinations of colors, are very delicately made. Only $2.

"Crepey" Eyes.

Eyes getting "crepey", as the beauty experts say? There's a new eye tissue oil out that will build up those shrivelled lids, pull up that tell-tale droop, eliminate those crow's-feet that show so surely that age is creeping up. This oil will relieve strain; make your eyes look and feel younger and fresher.

The consistency of the oil is very fine, and may be used on the most sensitive eyelids. A bottle: $1.25.

While on the subject, a muscle oil is one of the best cures for a "crepey" throat and strained lines in the face. Better have both oils on your dressing table.

Another Lamp.

Another lamp that is worth mentioning is the new "pin-up" portable lighting fixture that you can attach to the wall with a small nail. This means light in any corner, by any chair, at any height. The standard is an attractively scrolled affair in several colors. The shade is plain and will blend with all types of furnishings.

Colored Sequins.

Sequins forget to be gold and silver, and decide to take on not only another color, but several. There are some evening bags done up with these vari-tinted sequins, some in bright purple, green, white and red, all combined to give a glowing tone. Others in green, orange and yellow are as stunning; still another combination is lavender and shades of tan.

Sounds vague, for the colors are mottled in effect, and the total is a sort of new and wonderful color that you never saw before.

Tape Measure Clocks.

The trouble with gadgets is that they look like one thing and are, in reality, something else. Those clocks, for instance. You look at them and try to tell the time, but after five minutes the hands haven't moved. You investigate and discover there's a little tab sticking out of the bottom. Pull the tab, and a neat tape measure comes out. The clocks are in several shapes, and all are about an inch and a half high. Price, 50 cents.

Call Katherine Smith, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 105, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Pattern No. 822.

THE MOST POPULAR dress for daytime is tailored, with boyish collar, belt and straight skirt lines. This one adds little buttoned tabs to give it distinction and a touch of the feminine.

The long-sleeved version is for winter wear in northern climates. The short-sleeved version is for the woman who plans a cruise or spends winters in the South. It may be made in many charming combinations of contrasting fabrics.

This pattern is cut in sizes 14 to 42. The long-sleeved frock requires about 2⅞ yards of 54-inch fabric. The exact yardage for both is given on the pattern envelope.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE

Lovely Jocelyn Crane is the guest of the fashionable Oliver Keenes on a luxury trip to Paris, which she has accepted to relieve Dick, her husband, of the expense of her presence during a difficult period in his business. Rita Keene expects Jocelyn to keep "Ollie" amused while she pursues a dangerous flirtation with Prince Glazanoff. Compromising letters between Rita and Glazanoff, entrusted to Jocelyn on the Ile de France, are stolen by Carrie Franks, a friend of Ollie's.

The last night out Jocelyn gets hold of the letters. Carrie sees her take them back.

THE others edged in curiously. Fear of scandal chilled Jocelyn's blood. She tried to walk away. But furiously Carrie seized her arm.

"Trying to steal my case, were you? Give it back." Something in her half-crazed green eyes told Jocelyn that even in hysterical, semi-drunken rage, Carrie wasn't giving her secret away. Not yet.

"How perfectly absurd!" she said frigidly, pointing down at the case on the chair. "Ollie—really!" But she couldn't loosen herself from Carrie's grasp.

Pearls Were Gone.

The scene somewhat sobered Ollie. "You leave Mrs. Crane alone," he protested.

But Carrie Franks was strong. Ignoring Ollie's indignant tug, she dragged Jocelyn back and back toward the deck rail, one hand clawing at the low-cut bodice. "Give 'em to me," she screamed.

Someone had called an officer, who was hurrying up. Jocelyn, rigid, white as marble, strained silently away. Ollie's voice stammered angrily on, but Ollie wasn't steady enough on his feet to help.

A figure towered beside Jocelyn. "What are you doing? Let this lady go at once." In her sick horror she recognized that voice. She was backed now against the railing. Even as Ogden Temple's arm shot out, Carrie snatched at Jocelyn's neck and flung her hand in the air with a gesture of tossing. Then Temple gripped her.

It was too late. The string of pearls snapped. Mary Derby's pearls. The clasp and half of them fell on the deck, but in that insane tossing gesture Carrie Franks had flung the other half into the sea!

In that last night on the Ile de France, Jocelyn Crane had lost half of Mary Derby's pearls and gained a bitter enemy. But Rita had her wretched letters back without Ollie ever suspecting the truth.

"Why didn't you tell me Carrie had them?" was Rita's comment when Jocelyn handed her the packet of letters. "I could have dealt with her." Her deep blue eyes with their fringed black lashes rested inquisitively on Jocelyn's young face, so very white and chiseled in its pride. "Ollie had some befuddled idea she broke that necklace I've seen you wear. Was it valuable?"

"You wouldn't think so," Jocelyn replied, and her firm, beautiful lips shut tightly. The price she had paid for losing those foolish compromising letters was higher than Rita could ever imagine. For how could she replace the pearls that Carrie, in a last frantic gesture, had flung into the sea? Pearls that, apart from sentiment, were an heirloom, all that Mary Derby's mother had left her for the proverbial rainy day. And how—oh, how, thought Jocelyn in despair, could she ever explain to Mary or to Dick the ugly accident that had led to their loss?

Glazanoff Arrived.

In Paris the Oliver Keenes always stopped at the Hotel Georges V, off the Champs Elysees, where, overlooking the domes and bridges of the city, upper private terraces rounded their apartment.

The Ritz bar, Harry's bar, the Travelers Club, with occasional dips at the Longchamps races and the Cercle des Capucines, where everyone went to gamble, claimed Ollie's uncertain hours. So far as anyone knew, he was sticking to champagne; the incident on the boat had ended his friendship with Carrie.

A basket of orchids announced Prince Glazanoff's arrival. From the moment of his great formal appearance in Rita's salon, Jocelyn—admitting his charm—foresaw and dreaded her own role. It was so very clear now why Rita had wanted her on this trip. She was to be the discreet accompaniment to a duet between her friend and the handsome Russian with his leopard eyes, his voice like a low minor chant leading Rita on.

And Rita, for the first time in her soft spoiled life, was afraid. Her tapering fingers with the crimson petalled nails dug into Jocelyn's arm. "My dear, this man fascinates me," she confessed. "I thought he was a gigolo, but he's in love with me."

"I don't think you can play with him," Jocelyn said slowly. "Better be careful."

Vanity Was Urge.

She looked at Rita who stood before the long mirror of her bedroom, dressing for lunch with Glazanoff. In her mind was a shade of contempt for the endless vanity that drove women like Rita to the invisible border line of danger in a ceaseless desire for admiration and sensation.

Ollie paid the bills for all this—for the Agnes hat slanted over those deep iris eyes, the black Vionnet gown slashed with whites, the pearl drop earrings and brooch, the perfume elusive and luring as the scent of hyacinth in the moonlight.

Rita looked back at her speculatively. "Will you do something for me, Lynn?" She used the coaxing dusky voice that Joselyn found hard to resist. "I want you to turn up at Boris' apartment, 7 rue Washington, at half-past two this afternoon. We can go on to my fitting at Manon's. I'm dying to see what sort of place he lives in," she added defiantly. "It's really quite all right——"

Jocelyn turned away. "I'll come, Rita. But I warn you he's no toy. And I won't screen any affair between you and Glazanoff."

What else could she do, though, for the moment? Cable Dick for funds she knew he didn't have? Go back and face him, on top of everything else, with the story of the necklace she would somehow, somewhere, have to replace? Oh, no—she couldn't do that.

She Longed for Dick.

At that moment Jocelyn would have given anything in the world to be back in the little house in Lawrence Park waiting for Dick to come home. The anguish of longing that shot through her was physical in its throb through the hollows of her body. The way his arms folded around her, the feel of his shoulder, the quick eagerness in his gray eyes and the rough brightness of his hair . . . a sob rounded in her throat with her need for him.

She was leaving for Glazanoff's when Ollie strolled in. A twinge of conscience halted her at the door. She hadn't paid much attention to Ollie lately. Something in his face today impelled her to turn back.

In his double-breased serge, stiff collar and polka-dotted tie, Ollie looked flushed and puffy. Yet in spite of a waistline bulge that his 40-odd years should not carry, and the pouches under his pinkish-brown eyes, you could see that not long ago Ollie had been an attractive man.

"What brings you around at this hour?" Poised in the beige crepe that Rita had declared too insipid for her own dark coloring, Jocelyn's warm golden eyes smiled.

Fretfully Ollie lit a cigarette. His hands were shaky. "Where's Rita?"

"Out somewhere," Jocelyn told him, and added quickly—"She has several fittings this afternoon."

He frowned, fidgeted. "She'd better watch her step."

"What do you mean, Ollie?" Jocelyn watched him as he moved restlessly about the room. Wandered to the windows open onto the terrace.

Friendship Renewed.

"Rita thinks she can do as she darn pleases," he muttered. "I've stood for a lot, but—well, she'd better watch her step." Under gloomy eyebrows he surveyed Jocelyn. "I should have married someone like you, Lynn. You're just as beautiful as she is, but you've got more brains in your little finger than Rita was ever born with. And I'll bet you're not cold as ice, either."

The color rose slightly to Jocelyn's cheeks as she buttoned her suede gloves. "I can be very cold when people say silly things."

Ollie sighed and swung quickly to another subject. "Who d'you think I barged into at the Ritz bar this morning? We kissed and made up over a couple of champagne cocktails. Carrie Franks——"

"Oh, Ollie——" Jocelyn sounded genuinely distressed.

"Don't tell Rita, will you?" Ollie's blue silk handkerchief dabbed at his bald spot. "Y'know, Carrie isn't a bad sort. She asked me to tell you she was so lit that night she didn't know what she was doing."

"Oh, Ollie!" Jocelyn repeated helplessly. "Do keep away from her."

"She broke your beads, didn't she?" he went on. "I've always wanted to tell you, Lynn, that I think it's up to me to buy you some more. Just say the word, old girl——"

Could Not Betray.

Ollie was vague about things. He had never even realized they were real pearls. Or had he? Was he offering more than he wanted to admit? Temptation swept into Jocelyn to tell him what his Carrie Franks really had done. But her lips went stiff against the words. Women had taken and taken from Ollie. Rita—and Carrie—fastened on him. No, she couldn't use him as the others did.

She walked to the door. "Forget it, Ollie," she said lightly. "But do be good——"

Her mind was not at rest as she moved with her long easy grace along the Avenue Georges V to the Champs Elysees. Ollie was seeing Carrie Franks again. It wouldn't be fair to him, after he had asked her not to, to tell Rita. Nor would it help any, for Rita would only create a scene.

The rue Washington was not far. Glazanoff's man, a flat-faced Slav, opened the door of the flat on a hush that implied the luncheon had been either too successful, or not successful enough.

With a sense of relief, Jocelyn decided on the latter. Boris Glazanoff seemed to fill the rather small room as he came forward to bend and kiss her hand. "You are late, chere madame," he said. His tawny eyes smiled boldly into hers. They told her that they had seen through Rita's transparent little trick of getting Jocelyn here in time to save herself from any undue advances on his part and they said, too, that he had his own way of punishing women.

"Oh, hello, Lynn." It was Rita's drawl when things weren't going to please her. A trailing boredom she knew so well how to put on. She sat on a grey velvet couch, a portfolio of prints loosely open beside her.

How to Keep Well

Dr. Irving S. Cutler.

Acne, or Pimples.

ACNE is one of the commonest of all skin diseases. It is sometimes disfiguring, and coming on, as it does, about the time boys and girls enter upon manhood and womanhood, it causes no little personal concern. Occasionally nervous and emotional upsets occur because of the unsightly character of the eruption.

Many authors believe that while there appears to be a family tendency to the condition it really represents a gland deficiency that occurs at the time of puberty as evidenced by change in the voice and the growth of hair on the body. At the same period the thyroid gland enlarges and sex characteristics become more apparent. There is also an accompanying increase in the functions of the glands of the skin. If all these changes occur slowly there is little likelihood that acne will appear. But if the gland mechanism is thrown out of balance by illness, improper diet, or poor hygiene the state of general health may be reflected quickly in disturbance of the skin.

There are numerous glands in the skin, known as sebaceous glands, that secrete oily material. Sometimes these secretions become stagnant, and as a result the ducts are filled with a jellylike, whitish substance. These collections slowly increase in size and give the appearance of pimples. When bacteria gain entrance to these glands the result is an inflamed area filled with pus. The way is thus opened for the destruction of tissue and hence scarring, depending upon the depth to which the infection penetrates. In certain individuals the infection may become chronic and last for a dozen years or more.

Treatment of the condition calls for considerable patience and persistence. Infected areas should be mildly scrubbed with soap and hot water. The blackheads should then be removed, not by squeezing the skin between the fingernails, but by a simple instrument known as a comedo extractor. Areas that show small pustules must be opened under sterile precautions and the pus evacuated. Following this process the area should be steamed by the use of a hot towel. Competent observers have stated that the thorough cleaning which the face receives under the above plan has more to do with relief of the condition that buckets of ointments and external applications. However, many dermatologists believe that sulphur has great value in the treatment of acne. This may be used in the form of ointment or powder.

The most successful plan of treatment appears to be superficial X-ray therapy. This agent should be employed only by a physician skilled in its application, as damage may result from overdosage.

The importance of treating acne promptly and effectively should be emphasized because of its effects upon the morale of the victim, who has a tendency to shun society and live in a state of emotional conflict with himself and his schoolmates.

What Today Means

"Scorpio."

IF NOVEMBER 16 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 11:15 a. m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m. and from 8:15 to 10:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:15 to 9:15 a. m., from 11:15 to 1:15 p. m. and from 10:15 p. m. until midnight.

Rather conservative influences will dominate commercial affairs on this date so care should be exercised not to exaggerate in making any form of presentation. The wise host or hostess will use some form of originality which will reflect to some degree their personality, in planning their entertainment, if they wish to do something that will vary from the commonplace type of hospitality. Married and engaged couples, as well as those seeking matrimonial bonds, will display good judgment if they avoid controversial subjects on this November 16.

If a woman and November 16 is your birthday, look forward to seeing or hearing from one that is very near and dear to you. Be careful your love for adventure and the picturesque things of life do not cause you to give too much credence to the tales of some prototypes of Baron Munchausen, who may be among your acquaintances. You might find it lucrative to write stories of a highly imaginative or romantic nature.

The child born on November 16, generally when it reaches its teens, proves to be a continual source of joy to its parents. Normal, as a rule, in every respect it is able to face life without any handicaps.

If a man and November 16 is your natal day, you probably have the spirit of a rover and the imagination of a Jules Verne, combined with the practical sense of a financier. Writing, composing, inventing, educational, legal, and scientific work are open to one of your versatility.

Week-end Food Problem Solved by Canned Goods

By Dorothea Duncan.

MOST business women take Saturday afternoon off, but the housewife often sacrifices the pleasure of a Saturday afternoon playing bridge or enjoying the theater, because she feels that dinner is too great a problem if she goes out.

If this preparation is the only thing that is keeping the housewife from a pleasure cruise on Saturday afternoon, the situation can be easily remedied. Let the dinner be a canned goods meal. Before you plan your menu, do a little exploring in your grocery store and learn about the unlimited supply from which you may choose.

Canned vegetables are attractive and modern canning methods preserve the natural flavor of the food in almost every case. They retain more of their food properties, too, than fresh vegetables cooked by the open kettle method.

Week-end cooking will be cut almost in half if your Saturday dinner is planned along the pattern of the ones in the following menus.

Saturday Dinner.

Clear tomato soup
Broiled pork tenderloin
Hominy with cream gravy

Whole wheat bread and butter

The pumpkin custard is made very much like the filling for pumpkin pie, and may be prepared in the morning and set in the refrigerator until time to serve.

Pumpkin Custard.

2-3 cup brown sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon salt
2 eggs
2 cups milk.

Mix ingredients in order given, beating eggs until thick and lemon colored before combining with other ingredients. Pour into baking dish and set in pan of hot water. Bake at 325 degrees Fahrenheit until a silver knife inserted in the center will come out clean. Do not let custard boil, as that will make it watery.

Serve custard with whipped cream and a garnish of tart jelly.

Ginger Fruit Cup.

Make a sugar and water syrup, using 1-3 as much sugar as water. As soon as the sugar is dissolved, add a few tiny bits of candied ginger and cook for five minutes. This should be chilled and poured over citrus fruits and pineapple which has been arranged in sherbet glasses.

House Clerk Succumbs In Virginia

Col. John W. Williams Served Assembly for 44 Years.

Held Present Post for 33; Authority on Procedure.

Richmond, Nov. 15 (AP).—Col. John W. Williams, clerk of the Virginia House of Delegates for 33 years, is dead.

He died in a Richmond hospital today. He suffered a fatal heart attack while under an operation for perforated stomach.

Although his health had not been good for several months, Col. Williams' illness did not become acute until early today.

On the sixth of December Col. Williams would have observed his forty-first anniversary as a member of the General Assembly staff. Thirty-three of these years have been spent as clerk, and for eight preceding years he was journal clerk.

From the clerk's desk he witnessed the rise and fall of prohibition in Virginia, the final adjudication of the State debt, the complete reorganization of the State government, and the development of the Commonwealth from a government operating on a $3,000,000 budget to one with appropriations approximately 30 times that great.

Bills to 12 Governors.

He had sent bills to 12 Governors for their signatures since he came to the Capitol from the mountains of his native Giles County as a very young man. He was born in Pearisburg March 23, 1869. He came to the General Assembly staff during the administration of Gov. Philip W. McKinley, and since then has served under Governors Charles T. O'Farrell, J. Hoge Tyler, A. J. Montague, Claude A. Swanson, William Hodges Mann, Henry C. Stuary, Westmoreland Davis, E. Lee Trinkle, Harry Flood Byrd, John Garland Pollard and George C. Peery.

Col. Williams recorded the memorable election of Thomas S. Martin to the Senate over Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, and the election of the new supreme court to succeed the readjuster court. He was clerk of the corporation and education committees of the constitutional convention of 1901, and was secretary to the code revisers of 1919.

Although he has a long list of services to the State, Col. Williams not long before his death said he was particularly proud of his contributions to the State's literature. To him went the credit for the index to the enrolled bills of the Virginia General Asembly from 1776 to 1910. Also in conjunction with Dr. Earl G. Swen, of Williamsburg, Col. Williams compiled the register of the general assembly and the constitutional convention from 1776 to 1918.

Procedure Authority.

Col. Williams was a man of medium stature, with a genial himle, and always an accomodating attitude. He gained for himself the reputation of being an authority on parliamentary procedure.

He was a native of southwest Virginia. He was the son of James W. and Mary Agnes Easley Williams. He was educated in Giles County public schools, Roanoke College and the University of Virginia. He was a lawyer by profession, having practiced in Pearisburg, and served as commonwealth's Attorney for Giles County.

He applied to Col. John Bell Bigger for his first position in the Capitol, and was appointed journal clerk in 1893. He served that post until 1901, and then was appointed as clerk by Gov. J. Hoge Tyler, and was elected to that position in the session of 1901-02. He went to work as journal clerk December 6, 1893.

Col. Williams is survived by his widow, Mrs. Annie Johnston Snidow Williams, and one son, John W. Williams, jr., who served on the western front during the World War with the 163d Aero Squadron.

J. Tilden Detter Buried.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Funeral services will be conducted tomorrow for J. Tilden Detter, 57, Gerardstown merchant, who died Wednesday at his home after a long illness. Mr. Detter, lifelong resident of the county, is the son of the late John L. and Nancy Elizabeth Detter. He is survived by his widow and a sister, Mrs. Emma Hutton, at Gerardtown.

Three Hunters Shot In Nearby Territory

One Accidentally Wounds Himself; Boy Shoots His Brother Unintentionally; Sportsman Loses Hand as Weapon Bursts.

Three victims of hunting guns were reported yesterday as the game season opened in Virginia and Maryland. Clear, crisp autumn weather greeted hunters in most parts of the two States.

A 20-year-old youth probably was injured fatally near Woodstock, Va., when his gun was accidentally discharged; another, 17, was shot unintentionally by his brother near Fredericksburg, and a Maryland sportsman lost his hand when his gun burst. In addition, an Eastport, Md., man died of a heart attack while in the field.

Shenandoah Hunter Shot.

Woodstock, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Thomas Dellinger, 20, son of John D. Dellinger, living near Conicville, 12 miles west of here, probably was injured fatally while deer hunting on the Shenandoah Mountains 18 miles west of Woodstock today.

In going down a steep bank Dellinger's gun, loaded with buckshot, was accidentally discharged and the load entered his groin and stomach. He was brought to Woodstock and the examining surgeon, Dr. R. C. Fravell, sent him on to the Winchester Memorial Hospital, where late tonight he was reported in a critical condition. This is the first hunting accident reported in Shenandoah County on the opening day of the 1934 season. Dellinger's brother and first cousin were with him at the time of the accident.

Henry Bridges Wounded.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.). Henry P. Bridges, noted sportsman, secretary-treasurer of the Woodmont Rod and Gun Club, lost his left hand when his gun burst while he was hunting wild turkeys with his guide on the club's preserve today.

Mr. Bridges was brought to the Washington County Hospital immediately, and amputation of the hand at the wrist was necessary. He was reported to be resting well tonight.

Two years ago during the hunting season Mr. Bridges had a similar accident, the middle finger of his left hand being badly mangled when the gun barrel burst.

Mr. Bridges went hunting with a guide in advance of a party of 45 hunters, including Mayor Howard Jackson of Baltimore. Numbered among Woodmont members who were on hand for the opening of the season were some of the wealthiest men in the country.

Mr. Bridges is nationally known to sportsmen, being the leading authority on wild turkey breeding, hundreds of birds from the Woodmont flock being sent throughout the country.

Boy Shoots Brother.

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Accidental shooting of Jesse Green, 17, by his brother, James, 16, marked the opening of the hunting season here today.

The injured boy was taken to the Mary Washington Hospital, where his condition was pronounced as serious, but not fatal. James accidentally discharged his 12-gauge shotgun when he tripped over a stone. The load entered Jesse's hip.

Several hundred Fredericksburg residents and citizens of surrounding counties were out early to open the season. The city clerk's office said 405 State and 909 county hunting licenses had been issued.

Heart Attack Fatal.

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—The opening of the gunning season in Anne Arundle County, proved fatal to Norman Bell, 54, contractor and builder, of Eastport, not by accidental shooting, however. He died of a heart attack while gunning near Harwood, 10 miles south of Annapolis. A well-known sportsman, Mr. Bell had taken to the field for a day's shooting with a party of friends. He became separated from his fellow hunters, and after a reasonable lapse of time, a search was started. Mr. Bell was found lying face downward in a field. He was brought to Annapolis Emergency Hospital, where Dr. Albert L. Anderson pronounced him dead.

Auto Kills Deer.

Berlin, Md., Nov. 15 (AP).—Dr. Charles R. Law was the only Maryland sportsman enjoying fresh venison today. A large buck deer belonging to his private herd, which grazes in a refuge near his home in Worcester County, was struck and killed by an automobile as it attempted to cross the Berlin-Snow Hill highway.

E. E. LeCompte, State game warden, gave Dr. Law telephoned permission to dispose of the carcass, and it was promptly skinned and prepared for curing.

Deer may be killed only in Allegany, Washington and Garrett counties in the early weeks of December.

710 Get Licenses.

Culpeper, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Last minute rush for hunting licenses for the season beginning today, worked the county clerk of Culpeper overtime. At closing time last night 710 licenses had been issued in the county. Of this number, 100 were State permits, 15 for resident trappers and nearly 600 for county huntsmen.

Partridges are reported plentiful in some parts of the county, but there are not many rabbits.

Deer Bags Multiply.

Parsons, W. Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—A large doe was reported killed yesterday by hunters in Clover District. Additional kills in Tucker County are reported by Lindsey Roy, Mackeyville, seven-point, 200-pounder, and A. N. Long, nine-point, 175-pounder, both at Roaring Run.

C. H. Bucklew was the first hunter of Terra Alta to bring a deer to that place. He shot a 200-pound buck.

Dr. Dorsey Brannon, Morgantown, killed a nine-point buck in the Cheat section. Other bags by Morgantown men were: Alan Phillips, five-point buck, Pisgah; Ray Rexroad, eight-point, Bruceton Mills; Lewis Gatewood, Charleston, shot an eight-pointer and Aubrey Lambert, a seven-pointer in the Cheat section.

Ducks Flock to Flats.

Leonardtown, Md., Nov. 15 (AP).—Ducks are flocking to the flats, creeks and marshes in St. Marys County by the thousands, and the hunters are ready for them.

A total of 304 hunting licenses, 11 State-wide, have been issued at the county courthouse, with 51 duck-blind licenses taken out. At the Leonardtown postoffice, approximately 50 duck-hunting stamps have been sold so far.

Vale Summit, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.). Walter Townsend Parker, 65, died yesterday at his home here after an illness of two years. He was a native of Vale Summit, one of the early mining towns of the Maryland coal field, and was in the mercantile business practically all his life.

Mr. Parker was one of the Democratic leaders in Allegany County and held the offices of road director, judge of the orphans court and county commissioner. He was a member of Mountain Lodge, No. 99, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, Frostburg. He attended St. John's Episcopal Church, Frostburg.

Surviving are his widow, the former Miss Sallie Hoblitzell; a son, Walter, at home, and a daughter, Miss Helen Parker, teacher in the Cresaptown school.

The Rev. George M. Bishop, of the Ettrick Methodist Church, officiated. He was assisted by the Rev. D. Edgar Woods, of the Ettrick Baptist Church.

Alexander Ewers Buried.

Lynchburg, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.). Funeral services for Alexander L. Ewers, 57, who died yesterday at his home here, were held today. Mr. Ewers was a native of Amherst County and had been ill a long time. He was a son of the late R. L. Ewers. He was a communicant of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. Mr. Ewers is survived by his wife, Mrs. Laura Ewers; two daughters, Mrs. W. T. Black and Miss Doris Ewers, and two Sons, E. R. and A. C. Ewers, all of this city.

Paul Conner Rites Held.

Maurertown, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.). Funeral services for Paul Conner, 28, were held here this afternoon at the United Brethren Church by the Rev. E. L. Miller. Burial was in Maurertown Cemetery. Mr. Conner's death followed an illness of about five weeks. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Mary Ann Conner, a son, five brothers and a sister.

Second Crash Victim Dies.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.). Espy Fletcher, 21, son of Charles Fletcher, injured last Friday night on Braddock road when his motorcycle was wrecked at the Cumberland & Pennsylvania Railroad grade crossing, died early yesterday at Allegany Hospital. Fletcher was employed by the Celanese Corporation of America. Besides his father, he is survived by a brother, Merle Fletcher, and one sister, Mrs. Clarence Barnhart, this city. Elmo G. George, 17, who was riding on the motorcycle with him at the time, died six hours later.

Court Voids Milk Price Regulation

Abolition of Board Seen if Review Is Refused.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 15 (AP).—The 1934 Virginia milk control act is invalid because it is not in the public interest, the State Supreme Court held today.

The court, in a fourt-to-two decision, said the Legislature undertook to make the dairy business profitable "and this it sought to accomplish by fixing the price of its products."

If the sale and consumption of milk is affected with a public interest it is difficult to see why all food products in principle are not subject to like supervision," the decision said.

The opinion was handed down by Justice Henry W. Holt, with Justices Epes, Hudgins and Chinn concurring. A dissenting opinion holding that there "can be no controlling difference between fire insurance business and the milk industry insofar as regulation and price fixing are concerned" was handed down by Justice H. B. Gregory, with Chief Justice Preston W. Campbell concurring.

Board May Be Abolished.

The case was an appeal from the Richmond Law and Equity Court, Part Two, where the right of the milk commission to fix prices, regulate production, and define distribution areas was challenged by a group of Augusta County farmers headed by R. J. Reynolds.

Unless a rehearing is granted, it is the general consensus at the capitol that the milk commission automatically will be abolished and the milksheds and regulations already set up by the commission in eight areas will become void.

Kone Brugh, a member of the commission, said he hoped the court's decision would not "result in the greatest milk war Virginia has ever known."

Attorney General A. P. Staples, as a member of the General Assembly, was patron of the bill in the Senate. The act was passed in the closing hours of the Assembly, after it was revised and sent down by Gov. Peery.

Rehearing Plea Seen.

Since then Senator Staples was appointed attorney general, and in that capacity appeared in the lower court, and also before the supreme court for the milk commission. Today he said he had not had an opportunity to study the opinion of the court.

It appeared certain he would ask for a rehearing if there is an indication one of the justices concurring in the majority opinion would consent.

Local milk boards have been set up in Norfolk and Portsmouth, Newport News and Williamsburg, Roanoke, Lynchburg, Waynesboro and Staunton, Harrisonburg, Danville and Petersburg and Hopewell.

Whether the license fees paid into those boards will be returned in the event a rehearing is not granted was another matter the attorney general said would require study.

The Virginia act was similar to the New York milk control act, which has been upheld by both the Supreme Court of the United States and the State Supreme Court of New York.

Subsistence Gardens Yield $11,415 Produce

Staunton, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Through the office of Miss Elisabeth W. Brooke, welfare director in Staunton and Augusta County, has come information that 779 subsistence gardens this season yielded produce valued at $11,415.15

This work was one of the Virginia emergency relief administration projects to aid the unemployed. Seed was furnished by the relief administration, which also made provision for canning equipment where the gardeners were unable to supply it.

Nine high school students who had never seen a motion picture had their first glimpse of the screen this week. They saw "Treasure Island" in Fredericksburg, Va. The students, freshmen at the Spotsylvania County High School, always have lived near Fredericksburg.

Survivors of the Twenty-ninth Division of the A. E. F., of Petersburg and Hopewell, Va., last night formed a "Last Man's Club," which is to meet annually as long as the members live. A bottle of wine, which will be drunk by the last man, was dedicated by the group.

An oyster turned the tabes on two rats that tried to invade the inner privacy of his shell in a smokehouse owned by W. G. Beane, of King and Queen County, Va. Beane figured that the oyster had opened for the purpose of getting some nourishment when the rats attempted to devour it. The oyster clamped down with a click and held the invaders until Beane's arrival.

Martinsburg Pastor to Take College Charge

Dr. W. A. Wilt Accepts Call to Lebanon Valley, Annville, Pa.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—The Rev. William A. Wilt, D. D., pastor of the First United Brethren Church here for the past six years, has accepted an unanimous call to the college pastorate at Lebanon Valley College, at Annville, Pa., in the church's East Pennsylvania Conference, effective January 1, he announced today. The church serves both the city membership and that in the college, the latter with an enrollment of 550.

Dr. Wilt is a graduate of Bonebrake Theological Seminary at Dayton, Ohio, as is also Mrs. Wilt, members of the same graduating class. Lebanon Valley conferred the doctor of divinity degree upon him in 1929. His home is near Selins Grove, Pa.

His first pastorate in Virginia Conference was at Harrisonburg, Va., for 18 months; then to Keyser, W. Va., to a mission service, which subsequently was expanded to a self-sustaining basis, staying there until he came to First Church here in 1928. His acceptance of the Annville charge will mean his resignation as president of the Virginia Conference Board of Christian Education, chairmanship of the conference's Christian Extension Society, Dean of the annual Summer Religious Training School at Dayton, Va., and president of the Martinsburg Cooperative Leadership Training School. He has been a member of the board of Lebanon College for some years.

His resignation as pastor of the First Church was submitted to Superintendent U. P. Hovermale, of the Virginia Conference, today.

Husband Is Accused Of Ignoring Alimony

Frederick, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Charging that her husband has ignored an order of the circuit court requiring him to pay her $20 per month pending a suit for separate maintenance and support of herself and child, Mrs. Rebecca Phelps, Chambersburg, Pa., has asked that her husband, Daniel Phelps, be adjudged in contempt of court. Judge Arthur D. Willard signed an order giving Phelps to November 20 to explain why he has failed to comply with the order of the court, and also why he should not be adjudged in contempt. In her petition for separate maintenance Mrs. Phelps charged her husband with cruelty.

$2 Auto Tag Rate Pushed In Maryland

Legislature Has Pledged Aid, Governor-Elect Nice Announces.

Walter Kirkman to Be Retained to Help Prepare Budget.

Baltimore, Nov. 15 (AP).—Governor-elect Harry W. Nice today said provisions for a flat rate of $2 for automobile tags, or as near that figure as possible, would be written into the original budget he sends to the Legislature or added to it during the session.

Nice also announced:

Walter N. Kirkman, right-hand man of Gov. Ritchie in budget drafting, will be retained to draft the appropriation bill for the first two years of the Nice administration.

To Watch Federal Steps.

Outline bills for old-age pensions, unemployment insurance and similar measures pledged in the Republican platform will be prepared in advance of the legislative session in January, subject to amendments necessitated by Federal Government steps in this direction.

The Governor-elect's announcement followed a conference yesterday with Gov. Ritchie and other officials of the present administration.

Most of the conference was said to have been devoted to the problem of unemployment relief—a matter Nice has announced he will make plans for before launching into any other question.

Legislature to Cooperate.

Nice said any fears that the Democratic Legislature would not cooperate or would seek to handicap him had been wiped out by responses he received to telegrams sent all members of the new house and senate.

Saying answers had been received from a majority of the legislators, all pledging aid toward the best possible legislation, the Governor-elect announced:

"I am going ahead with the program of a $2 tag, and I have no fear that the Legislature will not help to this much desired end. I intend to carry out every platform pledge that is humanly possible."

Gives Policy on Other Bills.

As for the other measures, he said:

"I find that old-age pensions and unemployment insurance can not be included in the budget, which has no place for legislation, but only for appropriations. In addition, the budget holds the right of way in the Legislature over all other bills carrying appropriations.

"Under this provision, the bills providing for old-age pensions and unemployment insurance must follow the original budget bill in the Legislature. I will send them to the Legislature, and it will probably be best to incorporate the appropriation needed for these into a supplementary budget.

"Budget-making is a highly technical undertaking, I find, and I have asked Mr. Kirkman to assist me with this experience. It would be impossible to select now a new budget director with sufficient knowledge of the State finances to jump in and draw up a budget at once."

Sunday School Group Elects Inwood Pastor

Gain, this city; secretary of children's division, Miss Matoaka Stribling, this city; secretary young people's division, Charles Andrews, this city; secretary adult and administrative division, the Rev. Police said he had stolen $8.51 from the boxes during the last week.

Anne Arundel Recount Asked In Election Tie

Republican Candidate Goes to Court for Writ of Mandamus.

Annapolis, Nov. 15 (AP).—The board of election supervisors of Anne Arundel County today was given until November 21 by Judge William H. Forsythe, jr., to show cause why a writ of mandamus designed to break the tie vote for county commissioner should not issue.

Noah A. Hill, attorney for T. Roland Brown, Republican candidate, tied with John J. Levay, Democrat, with 7,512 votes, filed the petition for the mandamus. It requested the court to direct the board of supervisors in their capacity as a board of canvassers to summon the judges and clerks of election from the K to Z polling house in the First Ward of Annapolis to correct and verify their tally sheets.

It was alleged that one tally sheet from the polling house gave Levay 184 votes and the other 179 votes, and that the board of canvassers accepted the highest tally in making the official canvass.

If a count of the ballots in this polling house breaks the tie, it is expected that the defeated candidate will then ask a recount of the vote in other houses.

Unofficially it was reported that the board would not contest the court order. If the tie is broken it will not be necessary to hold a special election, which would cost the county about $7,000.

Girl's Attack Probe Is Set For Monday

Slot Machine Gaming Also Will Be Placed Before Inquiry.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Judges of the circuit court have ordered the September grand jury to reconvene Monday to investigate the brutal attack made upon Miss Geraldine Kreh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard B. Kreh, the night of October 31.

Police say they have obtained a written confession from William Carter, colored, who was removed to the Baltimore Jail following rumors that an attempt would be made to take him from the Frederick Jail. Carter, it is said, implicated three other colored men.

State's Attorney Walter E. Sinn said other matters which have accumulated since the jury was excused also will be investigated. One of these is the seizure by deputy sheriffs of a number of slot machines and gambling devices.

At the September session the jury reported to the court the presence of gambling devices in certain stores and recommended that gambling be broken up. Since that time a number of slot machines have been seized and stored at the jail.

Three suits for damages have been marked for trial Monday. Anticipating that the defendants will ask for a jury trial, the petit jury has been instructed to return.

Two of the suits are those of Mrs. Anna L. McBride and her husband, Clarence A. McBride, Baltimore, against Bayard C. Burgess, New Market. Mrs. McBride seeks $10,000 and Mr. McBride has sued for $5,000.

Both suits are based on an automobile accident July 30, 1933. The plaintiffs assert they were passengers in the automobile of the defendant, and at a point near New Market, due to alleged carelessness of the driver, the car swerved to one side of the road and struck the wall of a bridge or culvert, injuring them.

The third suit, removed from Allegany County, was brought by Harry Lady against Elmer C. Brandenburg, both of Washington County, for $10,000 damages, alleging false arrest.

On the Air Today

By George M. Adams, Jr.

ANY day's glance at the program schedules of our three major networks reveals a round of music, classical and popular, a scattering of speeches and a number of old standbys offering the standard type of entertainment. But what a radio editor looks for is first, unusual programs of local interest, and secondly, so-called sparkling features offering something never tried before.

This afternoon, however, two hours of Columbia's network time—from 3 to 5 p. m.—will be occupied by a musical program which Leopold Stokowski hails as "of national importance." The veteran conductor is offering three new compositions by American composers, representing achievements in the development of native music.

Listeners will hear "The Santa Fe Trail," Symphony, No. 1, by Harl MacDonald, former cowboy; "Chapultepec," a tone poem, by Manuel Ponce, Mexican composer, and the world premiere of a new Negro symphony, by William L. Dawson, young colored composer and director of the School of Music at Tuskegee Institute.

Of these, Stokowski says: "Each composer has succeeded in eloquently portraying that aspect of American life which he has seen and lived most profoundly. To each of them America, its land, its people, and its life mean something vital and personal which they sought to express in music."

SETTING the scene for President Roosevelt's radio address today, N. B. C. will present a special dramatic program written around the village of Harrodsburg, Ky., which will be carried prior to his broadcast from that historic spot.

Entitled, "Wilderness Road, Harrodsburg," the sketch will be heard from 9:45 to 10 a. m. Fifteen minutes later N. B. C. and C. B. S. microphones in the village, the first Anglo-Saxon settlement west of the Alleghenies, will pick up the voice of the President and others participating in the unveiling of a monument.

TOMORROW'S 9 p. m. audience on WOL may be left limp and gasping from the thrills of "After Midnight," a drama of the more "meller" sort which will be presented on the American "Opry" House program.

This mildewed opus contains the standard lost will, the girl adrift in the big city, and is garnished with kidnaping, assault, murder and other things including sneers. It opens on a farm and then skips about in the slums to the midnight interior of a low dive, where, needless to say, love conquers all, and the dainty heroine lands in the strong arms of the hero.

LONG a memorable part of the artistic life of Washington, the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation concerts under auspices of the Library of Congress again will be presented to a Nation-wide audience over C B. S.'s network beginning November 24.

The first broadcast will present the Laurent Wind Quintet of Boston with Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist. Succeeding concerts will be performed by William Primrose, violinist, and Nadia Reisenberg, pianist (December 1); the Philadelphia Chamber String Symphonietta (December 8) and the Roth String Quartet (December 15).

VIRGIL JORDAN, president of the National Industrial Conference Board, heads a list of speakers interested in "Social Reorganization for Security," who will speak under auspices of the Intercollegiate Council and the National Advisory Council on Radio in Education, starting tonight at 10:30 on WRC.

Jordan discusses "The Problem Facing America." Others to be heard in the series are William Duryee, secretary of agriculture, of New Jersey; Isador Lubin, commissioner of statistics, Department of Labor; John W. Lewis, president, United Mine Workers of America; Secretary of Labor Perkins, J. David Stern, newspaper publisher, and Dr. Glen Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin.

WATCH KIDNEYS SAME AS BOWELS

Wash Out Your 79,200 Feet of Kidney Tubes

Your bowels contain only 27 feet of intestines, yet the kidneys contain nearly 10 million tiny tubes or filters which would measure 79,200 feet if laid end to end. Therefore, it is just as important to watch the kidneys as the bowels. Kidneys are working all the time and are Nature's chief way of taking the acids and poisonous waste out of the blood.

Healthy persons pass 3 pints a day thru the bladder which contains nearly 4 pounds of waste matter. If you pass less than this amount, your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes may be clogged with poisonous waste. This is the danger signal and may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and vitality, getting up nights, lumbago, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

Kidneys should be watched closely and need cleaning out the same as bowels. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS, an old prescription, which has been used successfully by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give quick relief and will help to wash out your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes.

But don't take chances with strong drugs and so-called "kidney cures" which claim to fix you up in 15 minutes. Your common sense will tell you that this is impossible. Treatments of this nature may seriously injure and irritate delicate tissues. Insist on DOAN'S PILLS, the old reliable relief that contains no "dope" or habit-forming drugs. Be sure you get DOAN'S PILLS at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

McNaught Syndicate, Inc. 11-16-34

Strange as it seems, you always come out loser when you get a cut or raise and then a raise or cut to balance it, if the change is measured in percentages. For example, if you make $100, then get a 10 per cent cut and then a 10 per cent raise you will end up with only $99. Yet if you get your raise of 10 per cent first and then a like cut you are still only getting $99. If you keep getting a raise and a cut, then a raise and another cut eventually you will be getting practically nothing.

The familiar "blow" of the whale is simply the animal exhaling its breath. The opening of the whale's nostrils is located on the top of its head, and when it exhales its moisture-laden breath into the colder outer air it condenses into visible vapor, giving the appearance of a fountain.

* * * *

Mr. Bassnger's abhorrence of water dated from midsummer of 1863, when he was a 33-year-old Civil War soldier. It was then that he was sent by his commanding officer to bring water for the troops from a stream shortly after a battle had taken place. Bassinger found the stream polluted by animal carcasses—then and there he swore he would never take another drink of water. For 69 years, until his death two years ago at the age of 101, he drank no water. He drank plenty of coffee, soda pop, and other beverages containing water, but water alone, never.

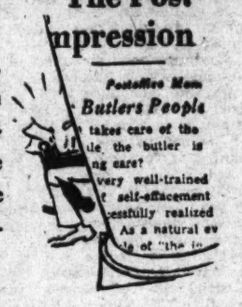
The Post Impressionist has been living behind a column for some time, now. We still don't now much about him. He hides behind a mask of anonymity, and when we approach his column to get a better view of him, he scurries around the other side like a squirrel on a tree.



Thousands of our readers, who turn to The Post Impressionist's spicy column in The Washington Post right after the orange juice every morning, have implored us to tell something about him. According to them, more legends have grown up about The Post Impressionist than about Paul Bunyan or Santa Claus. Every one wants to know more about him.

Well, we'll tell you what we know. The Post Impressionist is real, despite his anonymity. He is a world traveler. He knows the European Big Shots by their first names (he knew about Hitler when Der Fuehrer was just plain Adolph!) and for years he reported the doings of the League of Nations at Geneva.

He has been a war correspondent, and has sat with the generals in their protected dugouts and the privates in their muddy ditches. His battered typewriter has tapped out stories of gallant charges, of heart-breaking defeats in more than one war.

And he has written books in the best-seller class. He is perfectly at home at a literary tea, where the long-haired authors and the giggling spinsters gather. He would be perfectly at home in a Hottentot village, too. For he has been everywhere, and he has seen, well, almost everything.

But we still don't know his name. We know only that, as The Post Impressionist, he has endeared himself to thousands of readers, that his column is one of the most intelligent and amusing in the world, that his exceedingly civilized viewpoint is that of a true gentleman, that you can not afford to miss reading him each morning.

He's still hiding behind his column. He won't tell us his name. But he can remain there, in peaceful anonymity, if only he'll continue to write The Post Impressionist for The Washington Post.

Cards' Sale Indefinitely Called Off

President Breadon Says Negotiations May Be Resumed.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 15 (AP).—Negotiations for the sale of the world championship Cardinals to Lew H. Wentz, Oklahoma oil multimillionaire, tonight were called off "indefinitely."

Sam Breadon, president of the National League Baseball Club, who made the announcement, said he had no idea when negotiations might be resumed.

"Are negotiations off beyond possibility of renewal?" Breadon was asked.

"By no means," he replied.

"That I can't say; I have no idea," he said when asked when negotiations might be reopened. 'I expect to go to Florida in a week or ten days. I do not expect the discussion will be reopened during that time."

Wentz, who has described himself as such an ardent baseball fan that he "wouldn't miss a World Series for all the oil in Oklahoma, declined to comment, saying he had agreed with Breadon that the Cardinal owner should give out all information.

Says He Loves Game.

Wentz, who says he would like to own a major league club because he loves the game and not because of "any silly idea that there's a lot of money to be made out of it," has been negotiating for the purchase of Breadon's majority interest in the Cardinals for weeks, but news of it did not leak out until Tuesday.

The oil operator and Branch Rickey, vice president and general manager of the Cardinals, spent most of today in a downtown hotel discussing matters concerning the Cardinals' far-flung "farm system."

Breadon declined to say on what feature of the negotiations he and Wentz were unable to agree, but generally it was believed the hitch developed over some phase of the Cardinal "farm" system.

Breadon recently made Wentz a "take it or leave it" proposition. The sum was never announced officially, but it was understood to have been between $1,000,000 and $1,250,000.

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

IT IS to laugh, writes Mr. C. J. Smith, Santa Clara University '09, who takes violent issue with the ranking of the college football teams as presented by the recent Associated Press poll of the Nation's experts. Without further ado, I am turning the rostrum over to Mr. Smith this morning:

My Dear Mr. Povich: In the interest of absolutely fair play, and favors to none, let me beg space to put up a howl for the rear guard in the Associated Press' "grid poll" now running.

What are these 65 experts doing, playing mah-jong, or following football performances and seeing games?

Anyway, lo and behold, here's how they are being ranked:

1. Minnesota; 2. Stanford; 3. Alabama; 4. Pittsburgh; 5. Princeton; 6. Illinois; 7. Navy; 8. Colgate; 9. Ohio State; 10. Syracuse; 11. Santa Clara; 12. Rice; 13. Louisiana State; 14. Army; 15. Temple.

Minnesota, beyond question, earns her place both in points and opponents. It is the greatest team of the year. Stanford has deserved the second berth. Does Alabama rate third with Howard, Sewanee and Mississippi State, three "warm-ups," and Clemson among its victims?

Let Pitt pass at fourth. What did Princeton do to be given fifth place? How do they merit such a place with three "walk-overs" like Amherst, Cornell and Lehigh, to say nothing of Williams? Four setups out of six starts.

Grant Illinois its ranking of sixth. Navy at seventh? There are better candidates just behind.

Colgate is rated eighth. No one underrates Colgate; they are hot "stuff," but St. Lawrence and St. Bonaventure don't add much prestige to a schedule marred with defeat at the hands of Ohio State. Two "door mats," one defeat and two wins from major teams out of five starts don't seem to constitute any "hot doings."

Now Syracuse. The old "setups" appear again—Clarkson, Cornell and Brown. Brown, beaten in four out of seven starts, has been outpointed by opponents, 119 to 54; Cornell has lost four out of five, the opponents grabbing 85 points to Cornell's 21.

There you have 'em. This is what they call picking ten "major teams," in order of merit, by "experts," says the Associated Press.

Now I ask you to cast your eye over the teams rated eleventh, twelfth, and on down to the bitter end: Santa Clara, Rice L. S. U., Army and Temple. Look over the "also rans."

Santa Clara, to start off, is the only team to score on Stanford this year! Get a good load of that. And they did it with nine sophomores in the line-up. Smoke that in your pipe.

They put away Nevada, 40 to 0, which in turn beat St. Mary's Gaels, 9 to 7; the Gaels in turn took California, 7 to 0; Fordham, 14 to 9, and Washington State, 9 to 6.

Santa Clara took California to its worst beating in years with a 20-to-0 score. This same California team smeared Nevada, 33 to 0; gathered in the Trojans, 7 to 2; beat U. C. L. A., 3 to 0, and were barely nosed out by Washington, Stanford's "runner-up," in a 13-to-7 game.

Santa Clara, tied only by Stanford, hasn't been defeated since the second game on last season's schedule.

They have had exactly two "breathers" this year and these weren't exactly breathers at that.

What's the matter with a gang that can roll up 114 points to their opponents' 13? What do they have to do, beat the Chicago Bears, or something?

If they can't beat Navy, Alabama, Colgate, Syracuse or Princeton, I'll eat your editorial hat. And outside of Minnesota they'll give the remaining four the toughest ride they ever had. Any one of the "holy ten," barring Minnesota, would be forced to "pull leather" to beat 'em.

Now how about Rice? With an eight-game schedule, seven wins, one tie, tough competition, and 145 points to the good, against 31 for their opponents, they draw twelfth place.

The experts are plumb cock-eyed. What is Rice supposed to do to get some consideration from these experts? Do they have to play a legion of archangels?

Huey's Louisiana State outfit, with two ties and a moral defeat at the hands of one Alphonse Leemans & Co., don't stack up so high; at that they might well shake Navy, Syracuse and Illinois out of the apple tree.

Army seldom needs a calliope, and, looking over the schedule, I think a piccolo will do here.

"Pop" Warner's Temple Owls, with no defeats, merits better things than a rating of fifteenth; he didn't pile up 184 points against a lot of cigar store Indians.

Where does all this leave us? I'll try to tell you. This rating racket, All-American stuff and the Rose Bowl business needs a little dose of New Deal tonic.

For years miles of galley type have been ground out to make a Roman holiday for Princeton, Navy, Alabama, Army and other "good copy" outfits.

It has got so that less publicized teams have a harder time to get consideration than a rabbi in Hitler's cabinet.

What the devil is football anyway, a bull-moose affair where only the brethren can get recognition?

The press builds up a stage, picks ten "big noises" in the sports sheets, gets 'em all dressed up in Lord Fauntleroy outfits, and the public says: "Oh, ain't they wonderful." Why should they do otherwise? Of course, Princeton is better than Rice: in the newspapers; Navy sounds better than Santa Clara through a press megaphone. The score board would tell a different story.

To say that Rice, Santa Clara or Temple must play second fiddle to Princeton, Navy and Alabama is pure "hog wash."

They produce the goods and rate as many orchids as anyone else.

Locker Room Bronze of Jones Spurs Navy to Greater Feats

By Paul Gallico.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 15.—The football dressing room at McDonough Hall at the Naval Academy is pretty much like all dressing rooms—steamy atmosphere drifting in from the shower room, pads and jerseys and stockings scattered over the floor, big athletic association hampers lined around the walls, noise and laughter and chatter going on, naked forms wandering around rubbing themselves with towels, fine, stalwart bodies, most of them patched and plastered.

There is the inevitable table with antiseptics and bandage and ointments and tape where the slightly wounded are painted red or brown, or taped, and the coaches wander through, pausing now and then to talk to this or that player. There is, however, in that dressing room, one strange item for a locker room. It is a bronze bust, set on a tall slim pedestal, the head and shoulders of a determined looking young man with his hair in braids in back as was the custom in his day.

No Sign or Mark.

There is no sign or identifying mark on him. There he stands quietly and contemplatively, just outside the entrance to the shower room and over by the first aid table. I inquired who he was and what his statue was doing in the football room of the midshipmen.

"Well," said Babe Brown, commander in charge of football and himself a great Navy football star in his day, "that fellow was a pretty hard fighter in his day and the boys kind of like his ideas, so they asked permission to take him out of the museum and bring him down here to stay with them for a little while. Every time they pass him or look at him they think of what he said many years ago when called upon to surrender with his ships in torn and sinking condition. He said: 'Surrender, gentlemen? Why, I have not yet begun to fight.' That's John Paul Jones."

Now, if you are looking for the explanation of this truly amazing Navy team, unbeaten to date, you need not look very far beyond that bronze bust of one of the most terrific fighters the United States Navy has ever known. You might look just a little beyond the figure, into the coach's room, where you will find the pleasing person of young Tom Hamilton, Annapolis '27, head coach now. The key to Navy's splendid record is, I suspect, shared by these two.

For the Navy football team of 1934 is small, light and young. The best of the 1933 team was lost through graduation. Until the discovery of Buzz Borries, its roster listed no distinguished football names. But it has an unquenchable spirit and that spirit is fired by a young and brilliant coach who is in his own right probably a master tactician.

Hamilton an Aviator.

It has a great coach in Rip Miller, of Notre Dame, who is a story in himself, and a cohesive and happy staff of assistant coaches in that most of them played with Hamilton during their years together here. Hamilton is a lieutenant, junior grade, and an aviator. You will find his name on the bronze tablet in McDonough Hall as having won the Thompson Trophy in 1927 for the midshipman contributing the most to furthering Navy athletics for that year. He is also an inventor.

Were you to go into one of the dormitories some night during the season, between the study period and lights out, you might come upon a strange sight. You would see the stalwart, dark-haired Hamilton with his round face, full lips and strange, oblique eyes sitting at a table, opposite one of his quarter backs or signal callers. Between them would be a board with colored pegs representing two football teams, a football chart and a pack of cards with text and numbers across their faces. And the two men would be playing a game.

Probably Best Game.

Navy Eleven Tapers Off For Pitt

Attack Polished in Drill; Advantage in Weight Held by Visitors.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Although heavy work was taboo, Navy football players put in a busy afternoon today tapering off for the East's big clash on Saturday with the Pittsburgh Panthers in Thompson Stadium.

The program was largely one of perfection of detail in methods to be employed against the invaders, and aside from an extensive drill in the general crop of plays, the coaches devoted much time to putting the final polish to special phases of attack designed primarily for use against the Panthers. In a dummy scrimmage the regulars had a defensive drill against Pittsburgh's style of attack as exploited by the squad "B" shock troops.

In Fine Condition.

Head Coach Tom Hamilton pronounced all of his charges in fine condition physically, and eager for the argument. Although on general comparison, Pitt looms as a winner by a comfortable margin, there is growing confidence in several local quarters that the Middies will slip one over on the Smoky City outfit.

A glance at statistics of the rival players shows that Pitt will not have as great a weight advantage as some of Navy's former opponents, but in experience and power the Panthers have a couple of notches on the Tars. Pitt, like Navy, has comparatively light guards. Armiston and Capt. Hartwig, the Panther pair, weigh 175 and 178, respectively. They will be pitted against Capt. Dick Burns, 170, and Dave Zabriskie, 175.

Tackles About Even.

The game forebodes some lively tackle play. Slade Cutter, Navy's star on the right side, who weighs 212, will be up against Hoel, 193, while Beppo Lambert, 178, of Navy, will fight it out with Olejniczak, who tips 194 pounds.

Izzy Weinstock, Pitt's pile driver, weighs 191, against Bill Clark's 175. At quarterback, Buzz Borries, Navy, tips 172, against 173 for Munjas, and Pratt and King, the Navy halves, weigh 163 and 178, against Nicksicks, 176, and Larue, 168.

Cards' Sophs To Get Call In Finale

Bergman Breaks Custom Following Brilliant Work Last Week.

DEPARTING from an old custom of starting all seniors in their final game before a local audience, Coach Dutch Bergman yesterday announced that Catholic University's sophomores will take the field tomorrow against South Dakota at Griffith Stadium. The kick-off will be at 2 p. m.

Bergman's decision was influenced by the splendid work of the second-year men against Oglethorpe last week. Looking to 1935 when Catholic will play a stronger list of opponents than this season, he intends to give these rookies as much experience as possible in the last two games.

There appears to be little, if any chance of using reserves against Duquesne next week, unless, of course, as substitutes for injured men.

All to See Action.

There will be a sprinkling of graduating gridders in the C. U. line at the opening whistle, however, and all will be in the fray at one time or another—Capt. Bill Conter, tackle; Red Fleming, end, and Gene Augusterfer, quarter back.

Juniors in Line-ups.

The junior class will be represented by George Mulligen, end; Lajousky, guard, and Karpowich, tackle.

Yesterday the Cardinals' camp was devoted to work against Warner system formations which South Dakota is expected to use. The varsity held dummy scrimmage with the freshmen for an hour. Time also was devoted to polishing up the aerial attack which should be rather important tomorrow in view of the visitors' ponderous line.

To Arrive at Noon.

South Dakota will arrive today at noon and is to limber up this afternoon at Brookland. Coach Harry Gamage is bringing a squad of 25 men for the game.

Catholic U's freshmen have a game tomorrow with Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport, Pa. A squad of 19 players, directed by Coach Ed La Fond, leaves this afternoon by bus. The Cardinal yearlings broke even in two previous games, bowling over Maryland's frosh, 12-2, losing to Navy "B" team, 9-6.

Sarazen's 69 Tops Play in Australia

Nine Others Either Equal or Shatter Par 74; Cooper, Ezar 2d.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Nov. 15 (AP).—Paced by stocky Gene Sarazen, visiting American professionals monopolized the first round today in the 72-hole Melbourne centenary open golf championship.

The veteran Sarazen clipped five strokes off par over the 6,504-yard metropolitan course for 69 and a one stroke lead over his closest pursuers in the chase for the first prize of $5,000.

A 6-foot putt on the seventeenth green, that hit the back of the cup and hung there stubbornly, deprived Sarazen of a tie for the course record of 68.

Par Is Shattered.

The six members of the team representing the Professional Golfers' Association of America and three other golfers from the United States either equaled or lowered the par of 74 along with Sarazen.

A stroke off the pace were "Light Horse" Harry Cooper, of Chicago, and Joe Ezar, an unattached invader from America.

Joe Kirkwood, the trick shot artist, native of Australia and now a resident of New York, was tied for third place with Ed Nai Smith, of Canada, with 71s, while Leo Diegel, Philadelphia; Jimmy Thomson, Los Angeles, and V. S. Richardson, Australia, were involved in a triple-tie at 72.

Young Ky Laffoon, the Denver sensation, stood along at 73, while three of his teammates, Craig Wood, Denny Shute, former British champion, and Paul Runyan, American pro titlist, were tied at 74. Edward J. (Ted) Smith, of La Crosse, Wis., posted a 77.

The amateur threat was led by Jack McLean, the Scottish-Irish champion, who carded a first round 75. The Hon. Michael Scott, who at the age of 55 annexed the British amateur crown in 1933, returned an 81.

Contee Leads Attacks as His Team Goes Ahead in School Series.

SCORING touchdowns in every quarter with a varied assortment of line and air maneuvers, Dunbar High School took the lead in the colored high school championship football series yesterday by defeating Cardozo, 25-0, at Griffith Stadium.

Dunbar assumed an early lead, scoring in the first three minutes of play when Curtis, end, recovered Harrod's fumble behind the latter's goal line.

Cardozo threatened to even the count, but the fast charging Dunbar backs and linemen smeared play after play in the opening quarter.

Gordon and Hightower engineered a series of line plunges in the second quarter, paving the way for Contee to score a touchdown from the 4-yard line.

Contee Scores Again.

Contee plunged over for his second touchdown near the close of the third quarter after Cardozo had suffered numerous penalties.

Harrod accounted for the final touchdown in the fourth quarter, skirting right end 15 yards behind good interference. Hightower dropkicked the extra point.

By Walter Haight.

THE "sport of kings" which the public supports returned to nearby Bowie yesterday. Under ideal racing conditions a crowd of 8,000, the bulk of which was from the Capital, greeted the opening of the 13-day meeting in Prince Georges County. Bowie was not long in living up to its reputation as a "longshot" track for the first winner of the fall season was Gifted Lady at $83.60 mutuel. However, as the program progressed the favorite players were rewarded and, as usual, the crowd left the track divided into two classes—the winners and the losers.

The Bowie Claiming Stakes was the day's feature and a field of nine accepted the issue over the mile and a sixteenth course. The winner was the Shandon Farm's Dust Girl which left no doubt as to her superiority at the weights, against a field which received a varied assortment of good, bad and indifferent riding.

Beats 28-to-1 Shot.

The daughter of Brooms, which generally pays her way with her sprinting abliity, showed a keen liking for the distance yesterday and she had something left after leading W. H. Gallagher's Moralist, a 28-to-1 shot, home by two and a half lengths. Late Date, after a rough trip, was third another half length away.

Dust Girl, handled by Jockey Coucci, who was riding his second winner of the day, was the medium of a heavy closing play that installed her a 2-1 favorite. She looked as much shortly after the break when she bounded to the front.

Going up the back stretch, Dust Girl seemed to be saying "Excuse my dust," as she ankled along, followed by Moralist and Dusky Princess. Late Date was diving from pocket to pocket at this stage, but her backers held hope.

Urged on by Coucci.

However, there was no catching Dust Girl. Coucci shook her up a bit approaching the stretch turn and it was all over except the pay-off. Late Date's late rush was too late to save second money from the determined Moralist.

As a dollars and cents proposition, Dust Girl was $5.90 to win in the $2 mutuels.

Gifted Lady, a full sister of Her Grace, showed a flash of real form yesterday in graduating in the day's opening number. To the tune of an $83.60 mutuel, she glided to the wire two lengths ahead of Gay Knightess, which, in turn, had a head margin over Candy Maid. The race was between those three from the start and Silvo Coucci's riding had much to do with the final result.

Knight of Old Wins Sprint.

Another relation of several stake horses stepped down in the second race when Knight of Old galloped away with a six furlong sprint to pay a $25.20 mutuel. Corrymeela followed the ultimate winner but failed to threaten at any stage. The well-beaten third was Smooth Crossing. The colored apprentice, Reid, was in his glory on the front-running Knight of Old.

Sonny Workman rode Rough Diamond, from the C. V. Whitney Barn, to his third straight victory in the third race but the Washington rider had to work in top form to keep his mount ahead of Official. They finished noses apart and some three lengths in front of Banish Fear. Rough Diamond was a $5 favorite. The Guy Bedwell luck, which held good in Knight of Old's victory, left him when Beyond Doubt, a recent claim from E. R. Bradley, broke down and had to be led back to the judges' stand.

Nose Decision Results.

Garden Message, owned and operated by Arthur Hullcoat, scored a nose decision in the fourth race. The son of Messenger, which figured in a dead heat with Jester B.

GAY KNIGHTESS saved ground while bettering her position, but was unable to menace the winner during the final drive. CANDY MAID raced DAY SIGNAL into early submission, moved clear entering the home stretch, but weakened fast approaching the finish. SALLYSHANNON was hard ridden. GOLDEN ANN broke very slow.

KNIGHT OF OLD opened up a clear lead after leaving the back stretch, was steadied in front thereafter, and held CORRYMEELA safe. Latter followed in nearest attendance of the winner from the beginning, but could not threaten. SMOOTH CROSSING, well up in the early stages, was kept on the outside and held on well after bettering his position. GLENDYE, in close quarters when leaving the back stretch, was taken to the outside in the last five-sixteenths, and finished stoutly. FEUDAL LORD held to a forward position in the early racing. He failed to rally when shaken up. BELIEVER broke well, but lacked speed to maintain a forward position. SMUGGLED IN lost ground. ROUND TABLE lacked speed to enter contention. NED O. fell back badly immediately after breaking forwardly.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. The Fort McHenry. For 2-year-olds; allowances. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:15. Off at 2:17. Winner, C. V. Whitney's b. g. ROUGH DIAMOND luckily secured racing room on the inside during the opening furlong to enter contention, assumed command midway of the turn, then gamely withstood a hard drive to outstay OFFICIAL. Latter held on with excellent courage after holding command for a brief period. BANISH FEAR raced strongly in the first half-mile, then began to weaken gradually. BEYOND DOUBT could not better his position. He pulled up very lame and was dismounted after the finish. CRISTATE broke slowly and could never enter contention. JUDGE BLAKE was held perfectly safe.

PRINCE ABBOT, outrun for six furlongs, came through on the inside entering the home stretch and closed stoutly while in close quarters. JAMISON went prominently and fought it out gamely. LAW SUIT was taken wide when making his run in the last half-mile. CHARTRES weakened after five furlongs. LITTLE LAD was steered wide throughout. CHANCE FLIGHT stopped.

DUST GIRL outran her field to the first turn, then went along under restraint until reaching the home stretch, was shaken up and held MORALIST safe. MORALIST, prominent throughout, continued gamely when put to a hard drive. LATE DATE secured racing room on the inside when CARABINIER II circled his field and made up some ground in the last half-mile. CARABINIER II circled his field and finished with good courage. STEELHEAD was unable to menace the leaders. MAD FRUMP was never a factor. DUSKY PRINCESS began tiring after six furlongs.

HOPE TO DO, quickest to begin, and displaying good speed, raced TRUMPERY into submission, saved ground entering the home stretch, then held on determinedly to stall off POMPEIUS. Latter broke into the clear same and stopped back. He was kept on the outside, then worked his way up to close with a rush, and appeared best. DREEL came to the outside in the closing drive and closed stoutly. ST. STEPHENS raced strongly until reaching the home stretch, then tired in the closing furlong. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MERIDIAN QUEEN (Field), $11.90, $7.30, $4.70; TUFFY G. (Field), $7.30, $4.70; FOXLAND HALL, $5.10.

MERIDIAN QUEEN, going in her best form, after being sent into command at once, shook off early contention from GRAND ACRE and ENERGETIC BOY, then held on stoutly, and barely lasted to win. TUFFY G., as usual slow to settle in his stride, bettered his position readily in the last half-mile, and was wearing the winner down at every stride nearing the end. FOXLAND HALL raced well placed in the early stages, but hung after making a bold effort midway of the home stretch. ARAB finished stoutly in tight quarters. SOUND MONEY showed a good effort. JIMMY D. went well. MARCASITE, taken back after the start, then allowed to drop far out of contention, closed a good gap after being steered very wide in the last half-mile. ENERGETIC BOY and GRAND ACRE stopped.

Sample Is Likely to Start in "Crucial Battle" of Season.

LEXINGTON, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—The Washington and Lee Generals this afternoon completed work for their game with the Indians at William and Mary Saturday, putting the final touches on their plans for what might easily be called the most crucial battle of the season.

With two weeks' rest, and with their squad at top strength, it is pointed out here that the Indians might easily score an "upset," although the Generals are favored to win. Athletic officials today recalled that last year the Washington and Lee eleven barely eked out a 7-0 victory over the Williamsburg team, and that members of the "Big Four" have found the going tougher and tougher against the Indians.

Air Defense Stressed.

The Generals this week have stressed defense against an aerial attack. The team also has been perfecting its passing combinations. Last week-end at Virginia the Generals turned loose a barrage of passes that smothered the Cavaliers, and it is expected they will take to the air again this week.

Coach Tilson has indicated that he may not decide on a starting line?up until the eve of the game, but it is probable that Wilton Sample, sophomore, who reeled off a 55-yard run against Virginia, will be in the back field.

The Generals will be up to full strength Saturday, having come through the Virginia game without injuries.

Poor Court Forces Cut In Waynesboro's Card

Waynesboro, Pa., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—The lack of adequate playing facilities may leave Waynesboro High School with only two home basketball games this season, it was learned today.

Waynesboro's antiquated gymnasium has proved a handicap to every team visiting here and to the Tornado itself. It is the oldest playing floor in Franklin County and also in Cumberland Valley. Games with two Cumberland Valley teams, Hagerstown and Martinsburg are the only certain ones on the schedule at present.

Champions of 14 D. C. Clubs Vie Today in Last Important Golf Tourney of Year

Steward to Defend His Crown

Hollebaugh, Pitt Among Strong Entrants at Congressional.

WASHINGTON'S last important golf tournament of the year will be played today at Congressional Country Club, where champions and runners-up from 14 District clubs will meet in the annual "champion of champions championship."

Thirty-six holes of medal play, starting at 9 a. m., are on the menu.

Naturally, the defending titleholder, Luther C. Steward, jr., of the host club, will be the hot favorite, but there are half a dozen other challengers who are to be reckoned with in this event. Steward won his club championship from a strong field, defeating Frank Goodwin in the finals. A few weeks later he shot a 71 to set a new amateur competitive course record while winning the Tatum Cup at his club.

Hollebaugh Entered.

Harry Pitt, Manor titleholder, anxious to add the "champions" crown to his huge collection of golf prizes, also is expected to put in a strong bid for honors.

Pressing business will necessitate the withdrawals of Miller B. Stevinson, of Columbia, six-time titleholder, and Bill Harvey, Manor runner-up, while illness will prevent Freddie Hitz, Chevy Chase runner-up, from competing.

Competed in Amateur.

Two of the entries, Martin F. McCarthy, of Columbia, and Jimmy Drain, of Washington Golf and Country Club, participated in this year's National Amateur at Brookline. McCarthy, however, hasn't touched a golf club in two weeks, and says he's going out for the "fun of it."

Professional Roland Mackenzie will conduct the morning and afternoon rounds.

Other entrants are:

Maj. R. K. Sutherland and Capt. K. J. Fielder, Army-Navy: Eddie Bean and Jess Baggett, Beaver Dam; Lou Harrison and Maurice Cooper, Argyle; John Holzberg and Leroy Sasscer, Indian Spring; Frank Reeside, Chevy Chase; Howard Nordlinger and Maurice Goldstein, Woodmont; Dr. Calvert E. Buck, Washington; Bernard Dennell, Kenwood, and Johnny Harbin, Belle Haven.

Claude Rippy and Volney Burnett will meet at 2 p. m. Sunday in their semifinals match of the Rock Creek turkey golf tournament. Pat Axtell also will face Harold Bowers in the semifinals Sunday, provided Bowers returns in time from his hunting trip.

Several matches in other flights were played yesterday. Earl Jamison, the left-handed star, eliminated Karl Dixon, 3 and 2, and J. A. Collins defeated J. D. Grant, 2 and 1, in the second flight. J. B. Trueworthy defeated B. R. Campbell, 1 up, in 20 holes in the third flight, and W. R. Enyeart won from Ray Kerr, 2 and 1, in the fourth flight. Mrs. Florence Godfrey entered the women's finals by defeating Mrs. Nick Altrock, 5 and 4.

His torn chest ligaments not entirely healed, Roland Mackenzie waxed bold yesterday and played with two hands for the first time in several months. He shot a 77 in the cold and wind, playing with Troy Carmichael and Jack McCarron.

Unable to agree on a date and place, Hermitage Country Club, of Richmond, and Washington Golf and Country Club have indefinitely postponed their team match originally scheduled for Sunday.

Jones, Hamilton Spur Navy Team

skin." It is probably the best football game ever devised because the players must call every play and one is enabled to meet practically every problem that faces the modern quarter back, including the diagnosis of the weak spots in a team's defense.

Hamilton invented the game originally to test and train quarter backs. It was turned into a commercial article later. After a couple of seasons at his game, with quarter back candidates, Hamilton told me that he could come away with a pretty fair picture of the minds of those young men and how they are liable to function when similar problems are met on the football field. It is the most fascinating of all skull practices.

Gained Repute on Coast.

Hamilton's reputation was made on the Pacific Coast. While stationed out there he whipped together a team of enlisted men that raised particular hell up and down California, beating teams of Army officers and giving some of the schools a run for their money. Mostly through the offices of Babe Brown, Hamilton was brought here as head coach, and Rip Miller of Notre Dame, formerly head coach, accepted second position as head line coach.

And that makes Mr. Rip a pretty big man. Because he understood that Navy wanted a man who had played Navy football and understood midshipmen at the head of Navy football. And gracefully and with infinite courage, loyalty and good spirit, Miller accepted his new coach and has molded Hamilton a fine, sturdy, efficient line. They say if you stay around the Navy a little while you'll get that way.

Long Has Violated Good-Sports Code, Grid Club Charges

NEW YORK, Nov. 15 (U.P.).—Charging that Senator Huey Long is guilty of "contemptible violations of the code of good sportsmanship," the Touchdown Club of New York passed a resolution today "publicly disapproving" the foster-father of the Louisiana State football team.

The resolution, adopted unanimously, was offered by David Hill, of Georgia Tech, a member of the club, which is composed of former football stars from all parts of the country.

The resolution sets forth that the club "opposes and vigorously protests against any individual using the game of football to further his own ambitions and self-aggrandizement; that the members resent the poor sportsmanship as exemplified by Senator Huey Long in ballyhooing for his own political ends, the fine team representing Louisiana State University."

Maryland Off To Encounter Indiana

30 Players and Coaches in Party; Are Confident of Triumphing.

FIGURATIVELY whistling to bolster their spirits, Maryland's gridiron warriors entrained last night for Bloomington, Ind., where tomorrow they clash with Indiana. The party included 30 players and coaches.

Though Head Coach Jack Faber was reluctant to concede his men more than an "outside" chance of winning, Old Line supporters are confident that the team will return home with its second intersectional victory of the season. Every one of the men is in excellent physical condition.

Victorious in its last four games, while Indiana has enjoyed only mediocre success, although against much stronger opponents, Maryland will be an even-money contender at game time. The Hoosiers are just recovering from a 30-0 blasting by Minnesota last week, while the Terps had a comparatively easy time stopping V. M. I., 23-0.

Undecided on Line-up.

Faber is undecided concerning the make-up of his starting eleven, but it probably will be Ennis and Willis, ends; Birkland and Stalfort, tackles; Minion and Simpson, guards; Andorka, center; Sothoron, quarter back; Guckeyson and Sachs, halves, and Gormely, full back.

Other players making the trip are Ellinger, Buscher, Farrell, Callahan, McCaw, Fletcher, Gretz, Widmyer, Nelson, Headley, Daly, Garroti, Stonebraker and Yeager.

The squad will detrain this afternoon in time for a limbering-up drill. It is scheduled to return immediately after the game, arriving at College Park early Sunday.

Stars of Rose Bowl Games Play Here

LEADING the invading Alabama All-Stars when they trek into Washington December 8 for a game with a local aggregation of specially culled pigskinners will be a corps of stars to whom the Rose Bowl is home. Alabama and the Rose Bowl are synonymous, for in five appearances in the classic the Tide has yet to be defeated.

Earl Smith, Jim Dildy, Ben Smith, Hupke, Hewes, Kirkland, Holly and other well-known alumni of 'Bama will be in uniform for the Tide when the local all-stars are met. Dyed-in-the-wool grid fans need no introduction to them. They helped make football history at the Southern school.

Hupke Was All-American.

Hupke was all-American last season, a unanimous choice. He was the outstanding lineman of a team that yielded only 17 points to the foe all season. The attack as well as the defense was built around his rugged frame, that always could be found in the thick of every grid argument.

Tickets for the game will be placed on sale this morning at Spalding's Sport Store. Box seats can be purchased now for the price of general admission. Tickets also can be procured at Almas Temple, which will receive net receipts of the game for charitable purposes.

The District team will be selected next week, although it will not be called together for practice until the first week in December.

Attorney General Golfs With Tunney

Johnnies 'Kidnap' Hopkins Freshman

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 15 (AP).—The St. John's College students are holding prisoner a Johns Hopkins University freshman, whose appetite is depleting the spending money of his captors and whose affability has won him friends in the student body.

Carried away by the annual hysteria that grips the schools with the approach of the Johnny-Blue Jay football game, five St. John's freshmen in an automobile "kidnaped" Benjamin Arnstein, 18, of the school of economics of the university, last night as he left his dormitory to mail a letter, and brought him to Annapolis.

He is quartered in Pinkney Hall, and today had the liberty of the city, but was on his honor not to leave until given permission.

Arnstien, who lives in New York, had dinner in the commons of Randall Hall today, sitting on a platform in full view of the entire St. John's student body. After the meal he made a speech, declaring he was enjoying himself, expressing the belief that St. John's would win the football game Saturday, and then sang the college song, "St. John's Forever."

"He sang it a lot better than some of our freshmen," remarked one of the St. John's students. Arnstien, who is a drummer in the Hopkins Band, laughed and said he was able to read music.

"I'm getting quite a kick out of this," he said, sitting on a table in the dormitory, surrounded by his captors.

Arnstien had 20 cents when he was captured, and the problem of buying his meals is being met by the St. John's students. They managed to get his dinner from the college, but Jack Bennett, freshman of Rochester, remarked:

"I bought his breakfast and if we don't get rid of this fellow pretty soon I will have to sell part of my wardrobe to raise funds for his food."

The St. John's students said Arnstien would be kept prisoner until tomorrow night, when he will lead the pajama parade for the bonfire that precedes the Hopkins games. They planned to take him back to Baltimore early Saturday and free him before the teams meet.

Manley Loses To Reed on Tech. K. O.

Referee Charley Reynolds refused to allow Manley to answer the bell for the sixth because of a bad cut over his left eye. Manley claimed the wound was inflicted when Reed butted him.

The contest, one of the ring's few legitimate "grudge fights," was cleaner and less spectacular than had been anticipated. The boys were afraid to tread too far from the straight and narrow because the Boxing Commission had chided them severely before they entered the ring. Manley was in front in the first two rounds, but Reed was finishing strong, having won the third, fourth and fifth rounds.

Red Journee, of Norfolk, and Bob Lowery, of Washington, battled six rounds to a draw in a middleweight contest. Lowery was much the faster of the two, but had no wallop to match the ponderous punch of his brick-topped opponent, who sent his right home often enough to earn the draw.

K. O. Riley scored a three-round technical knockout over Johnny Mays in a middleweight preliminary scheduled for 6 rounds. Riley began finding the range with his soporific right in the second round.

In the third he dropped the Fort Myer mauler for no count with a right to the jaw, then rapidly sent him to the canvas for two more nine counts. Referee Muggsy Morris then halted the proceedings.

Sammy Seaman won a split decision from Mike Groves in a five-rounder. The bout was nip and tuck throughout, with Seaman having a slight edge on The Post score sheet at the finish. Referee Muggsy Morris voted for Groves. Judges Bob Eller and Frank Schuyler cast their ballots for the California featherweight.

Golf Ball Kept White Under New Treatment

Pittsburgh, Nov. 15 (AP).—Science has found a way to keep the golf ball white.

By chemically treating the outer-coating of the ball, William C. Geer, of Ithaca, N. Y., has been able to produce a white coat which he says can not be discolored or even painted. Geer explained to the American Institute of Chemical Engineers today his method discards the original paint on the ball and makes it chemically white with a hard surface.

Harvard Stadium Yields 1,546 Liquor Botltes

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 15 (U.P.).—Caretaker Dennis Enright reports that his men cleaned up 1,546 empty liquor bottles at Harvard Stadium after the Harvard-Army game. Of these, 782 were discarded on the Harvard side and 764 on the Army side—not, however, in the center sections, where the West Point Cadets sat.

Snapback and Indigo Win In 'Chases

Harford Hunt Program Brings Close Finishes and Many Spills.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Two driving finishes featured the five-race program offered by the Harford Hunt Club today over the Pleasant Valley Farm, estate of Harvey S. Ladew.

The first occurred in the Sergt. Murphy Steeplechase, when Snapback, owned by the Sanford Stud Farms and ridden by W. N. Ball, nosed out Highland Dan. Mrs. T. W. Durant's colorbearer, after a 2-mile run over brush.

A substitute horse—Indigo, gray gelding owned by Mrs. J. S. Schiff, of Smithtown, Long Island—figured in the second of the close finishes, when he won the Fox Hall Farm Challenge Cup by a half-length margin over Barnstep, a stablemate.

More than 3,000 sportsmen and sportswomen turned out for the annual fall program of racing events in Harford County. Five races, all but one of which were steeplechases, furnished the afternoon's entertainment, while cattle judging was on the morning program.

No Riders Injured.

A half-dozen spills occurred during the jumping races, but fortunately none of the riders was injured.

Aries, Earl S. Potter's bay gelding, set the pace during the first half of the race, but went down at the eighth jump. Louis Stoddard, jr., who had the mount, fell heavily, but was able to ride in a later race.

Slieve Lune, W. Wallace Lanahan's little black gelding, ran a beautiful race to win the Alligator cup. Mrs. Durnat's Little Dan, with Charles R. White in the saddle, which was rated the favorite, was second, and Dan Rock, owned by Mr. Durant, was a close third.

Snapback's victory in the Sergeant Murphy steeplechase came after Brigade Rose, leading at the half-way point, failed to clear a fence. Snapback and Highland Dan, with J. Ball up, fought it out, with the former being on top at the finish.

Three hunt teams sought the Foxhall Farm Challenge Cup, but it remained for the Smithtown, Long Island, Hunt Club to retain the trophy. The Green Spring Valley Hunt Club and the First City Troop, of Philadelphia, also entered three-horse teams.

Colonial Team To Leave for West Va.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S football huskies head for the Alleghanies at 7 a. m. today, traveling by bus to Morgantown, W. Va., where tomorrow they play West Virginia.

The game will be the second between the two. They first met in 1920 when G. W. was reorganizing its athletics following the war, and West Virginia won, 81 to 0.

Eight Reserves Dropped.

The Colonials are leaving behind eight reserves who were pared from the squad yesterday by school officials because of scholastic deficiencies. They are Brewer, Braezel, Pettit, Parrack, McGibbony, Alexander, Glick and Cannifax.

Absence of the first three leaves the team without a full back for reserve duty, since Dale Prather was shifted to tackle. Frank Kavalier is scheduled to start at the position.

Probably Won't Start.

Ab Wright and Arnold Benefield, right ends who were injured Thursday, will make the trip though it is doubtful if they can start. Henry Vonder Bruegge probably will draw the starting assignment.

G. W.'s line-up will be Parrish and Vonder Bruegge, ends; Deming and Clark, tackles; Strayer and Kolker, guards; Rathjen, center; Jenkins, quarter; Leemans and Hanken, halves; Kavalier, full back.

The squad will be quartered at Uniontown, Pa., tonight.

Pittsburgh Squad Drills Here Today

Will Work Out at G. U.; to Stay Overnight.

En route to Annapolis, where they clash with Navy tomorrow, the University of Pittsburgh's football squad will stop over in Washington today for a light workout before proceeding to the site of hostilities.

Georgetown University has extended the use of its practice field for the Panthers' drill, which will last about an hour.

Headed by Coach Jock Sutherland, Pittsburgh will arrive at 9 a. m., going immediately to the Shoreham Hotel where it will be quartered overnight.

Furr-Wilson Bout Limit Parley Set

Decision to Be Made Today on 10 or 12 Rounds.

Phil Furr and Bob Wilson, principals in the District welterweight championship bout at the Riding and Hunt Club Monday night, will learn today whether they are to battle over a 10 or 12 round route.

The problem will be decided at a conference between Goldie Ahearn, Hunt Club matchmaker, Ralph Murdock, Furr's trainer, and Patsy Donovan, Wilson's manager.

A six-round preliminary between Sid Silas and Pete Bevan, crack local welterweights, has been carded for Monday. Other bouts are in the making.

Episcopal High Shenandoah Foe Today

Needs Two Triumphs for State Title; Pirates to Play St. Rita's.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Nov. 15 (Spl.).—Episcopal High School primed and expects to furnish Shenandoah Military Academy with a busy afternoon when they meet on Hoxton Field at 3 p. m. Saturday.

Coach Cardwell will have his full strength available.

Victories over Shenandoah and Woodberry Forest would clinch the State preparatory championship for the Cherry and Black gridders. A 13-to-13 tie is the only blemish on Episcopal's record in State games.

Alexandria High's underclassmen today defeated the seniors, 24 to 15, in an interclass game featured by long runs and passes.

The Pirate A. C. and St. Rita's elevens tonight agreed to a game for the 150-pound city championship Sunday, November 25.

Sam Berman and Joe Hamilton, local athletes, will give a play-by-play description of the postseason game between the Alexandria High School and Gonzaga elevens. The teams are to meet Thanksgiving Day in the local institution's homecoming day attraction.

Griffith Would Give $100,000 for Werber; Calls Local Boy Best Infielder in League

CLARK GRIFFITH, perhaps the shrewdest manipulator of purse strings in the American League, almost had to call the respiratory squad for his listeners—having told them he was ready to spend $100,000 for a single ball player, according to the Associated Press.

He saved himself the cost of an ambulance by quickly adding that the man he wanted enough to part with a hundred grand—Bill Werber, Boston Red Sox infielder—apparently wasn't for sale.

"If $100,000 would get Werber he would be playing for Washington next season," the Old Fox said.

Stanley (Bucky) Harris, Washington's new manager, was the cause of Griffith's remark that so startled his friends.

"If Griff wants to do me a favor," Bucky had said, "I wish he would take a hunk of that Boston cash he got for Joe Cronin and buy me Bill Werber."

"Yes, sir, only once before have I seen a ball player I'd spend that much for," Griffith said. "Back in 1912 I wanted to buy Ty Cobb for $100,000. Werber is worth every dime of that. I think he is the best infielder in the American League."

Griffith's eyes shone as he envisioned a deal that would bring Werber here.

"A home-town boy, a great star, what a player he would be here. The first good local boy we've had for years and he's got to be with Boston," he said.

Although neither has made a statement, word has drifted out of their conferences that Griffith and Harris would like to use Catcher Luke Sewell and Outfielder Fred Schulte in a trade for a good pitcher.

And the word also is that Pitcher Earl Whitehill and Outfielder Heinie Manush are not for sale—unless another Tom Yawkey shows up. Harris figures both will be valuable next season and he won't part with them unless he thinks he can get the better of a trade.

Ample Time Is Left to File Entries in Post Grid Contest

NOW is the time for all good men, and women, to file entry in this week's Postilion football contest. Contestants who are not under the wire by midnight tonight will be automatically disqualified.

There is still plenty of time to file entry, however. If your selections are in The Post's offices or postmarked before midnight, you have just as good a chance of winning as the next competitor.

The person predicting correctly the outcome of the greatest number of the games listed will receive four choice seats to the Georgetown-Maryland game November 24. The second-place winner will be awarded three seats.

Those finishing third, fourth, fifth and sixth each will be given two seats.

The chart below is for your convenience, but it is not necessary to use The Post blank to file entry. In case of a tie, priority of receipt will determine the winner. Should any entrants be tied on the number of games predicted correctly and their entries be received simultaneously, the competitor giving probable scores will be declared the winner.

On Saturday night, Harris B. Hull, the Postilion broadcaster will include scores of the games on his regular broadcast over Station WMAL.

Montgomery Announces Title Plan

Principals and Coaches to Pick County's Soccer Champion Monday.

THE high school athletic muddle in Montgomery County was cleared up yesterday when County Superintendent of Schools Edwin W. Broome announced a plan to select the county soccer champion to compete in the Maryland Public Athletic League for the State title.

Principals and coaches of the seven high schools will meet with Mr. Broome next Monday at Rockville and select the team to represent the county. The likely choice is the Gaithersburg team that went through a six-game schedule undefeated. Rockville was second with one defeat in seven contests and is the logical second choice.

May Be Extended.

Should the plan succeed it will be carried over to the basket ball and baseball seasons, with the county track meet scheduled as usual in May.

The county schools adjourned from the league idea sponsored by the board of education last year and the plan now is to play each other through invitation only, eliminating any possible disagreeable rivalries.

Mr. Broome stated conditions would not favor supplanting soccer with football at present. He also withdrew any objections to any of the schools playing in outside leagues such as the proposed inter-county basket ball league among Prince George, Arlington and Montgomery counties.

North Carolina Eyes Revenge Over Duke

Southern Conference Tilt at Chapel Hill Will Draw 30,000.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 15 (AP).—Regardless of the angle from which it is viewed, the game between Duke's Blue Devils and the Tarheels, of North Carolina University, at Chapel Hill Saturday, looms as the major attraction on Saturday's Southern Conference card.

The Blue Devils, unwhipped and untied in the conference and defending a share in the conference title, will meet Carl Snavely's Tarheels, who are eager to atone for last year's 20-to-0 drubbing, and believe they can do it.

Upward of 30,000 fans are expected to witness the game.

Haven't Won Since '28.

Not since 1929 have the Tarheels triumphed and, although there have been a couple of scoreless ties in between, the Blue Devils have been ruling the roost. They'll meet a much improved North Carolina eleven at Chapel Hill this year, however, an eleven fired with the enthusiasm of a winning record, inspired by Capt. George Barclay, one of the Nation's finest guards, who paces an excellent line.

Washington and Lee's Generals meet William and Mary at Williamsburg with the State championship the prize if they win.

Maryland Takes Trip.

While all of this is going on at Chapel Hill, Maryland's fine eleven will be battling Indiana in an intersectional game at Bloomington, and N. C. State will be opposing Georgia at Athens in another game in the series between Southeastern elevens, with the leadership in the interleague duel at stake.

Other games will pit Virginia against V. P. I. at Blacksburg, with Tech favored; South Carolina against Furman in what should be a closely contested battle at Greenville, Clemson against Mercer at Savannah and V. M. I. against Davidson at Davidson.

Et Cetera Hockeyists Win, Keep Slate Clean

Mungrum Shoots 135 To Top Coast Tourney

Los Angeles, Nov. 15 (AP).—Ray Mungrum, tall Los Angeles professional, jumped into the lead in the Westwood $1,000 Open golf tournament today, adding a par-shattering 67 to his 68 of yesterday for 135. Second was Ralph Guldahl, Los Angeles, who shot 68-69—137.

Don Erickson, amateur who set the pace yesterday with a 67, shot a 71, one under par, to finish in a tie for third at 138. With him was Willie Hunter, Culver City pro, who had two 69s. The tournament ends Saturday.

Stocks Develop Strength in Heavy Trading

Prices Gain Three-Tenths as Sales Mount to 1,554,230 Shares.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—Stocks were traded today in the heaviest volume in nearly four months as the market made a gesture at resuming last week's broad advance.

An outbreak of selling in American Telephone & Telegraph, following announcement the Communications Commission had ordered an investigation of the company and its relations with affiliates, dampened enthusiasm for stocks in the afternoon.

Gains outnumbered losses at the close, but were small on the average.

Trading Volume Up.

Swelled by brisk trading during an early upturn, the day's volume increased to 1,554,230 shares, the largest since July 27, compared with 958,460 yesterday.

Demand for steel and motor issues and various industrial specialties was accepted as indication share buyers were looking ahead to business improvement, instead of being influenced primarily by inflation thoughts.

Gold shares were sold. McIntyre Porcupine and Dome Mines each lost more than 2 points.

American Phone Drops.

American Telephone dropped nearly 2 points, to 109½.

Low-priced motors shares encountered buying in substantial volume, particularly Packard, which with Hudson and Hupp registered small gains.

United States Steel, General Motors, Montgomery Ward, Santa Fe, General Electric, International Harvester and other prominent shares finished only fractionally higher after gains had been whittled down in the afternoon.

Strong spots included National Biscuit, up nearly 2; National Steel and Bethlehem, each up a point; Underwood-Elliott-Fisher, up 2½; E. G. Budd preferred, up 3¼, and Devoe & Reynolds "A," up 2½.

Prices Gain Three-Tenths.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks was lifted three-tenths of a point, to 73.4.

In explaining renewed demand for stocks, brokers stressed Washington developments, insofar as they indicated efforts by the Administration to inspire business with courage to move ahead more rapidly.

A further rise in scrap prices in Pittsburgh was taken as a favorable pointer on steel production. Electric power output last week recorded a seasonal gain, but the margin of increase over 1933 dropped to 3.6 per cent from 5.4 the preceding week. Dividend actions called attention to improvement in corporate profits the last nine months. Heyden Chemical declared an extra payment of 25 cents a share on the common.

New York, November 15.—Never before in the history of the present generation in Wall Street have so many mergers of stock exchange houses been under negotiation or in process of actual consummation.

Virtually every important brokerage house in "The Street" is reported involved in the negotiations now under way. The association of stock exchange firms, consisting of the commission houses which do a public security brokerage business, has actually set up a bureau to facilitate such combinations. However, only a few transactions are likely to be effected through it. The proceedings involved are too delicate for any intermediary to achieve results. Actual negotiations are being carried on through visits back and forth among stock exchange house partners, as well as over luncheon tables at the Bankers' Club and the other eating places where brokers congregate.

The present very active merger movement in Wall Street is a direct outcome of the sharp decline in the volume of trading and the enactment of the securities exchange act of 1934. The contraction in turnover in 1931 and 1932 stimulated a few mergers, and caused some houses to liquidate and go out of business. However, most brokerage houses held on, with reduced staffs, in the hope that speculative activity would revive and the volume of turnover would once again permit them to earn enough on commissions, and interest charges on customers' debit balances in excess of the cost of call money, to show a profit. As a result of economies, the large commission houses felt by 1932 that, with a daily average turnover of 2,000,000 shares, they could make moderate profits.

The "boomlet" of the spring and early summer of 1933, incident to the inauguration of New Deal measures and currency depreciation, appeared to confirm the good judgment of the brokers who had "dug in," and remained in the business.

Securities Exchange Act Is Seen Curbing Activity.

The securities exchange act, with its prohibition of manipulation, its margin provisions and the restrictions, to be imposed by the Securities and Exchange Commission, on specialists and floor traders, has blasted hopes of an imminent revival of stock exchange activity.

The stock brokerage machinery of the country had been expanded enormously during the boom, as hundreds of thousands of new speculators opened active margin accounts. Now, turnover has fallen back to pre-war levels.

Accordingly, the brokerage community at last is tackling the task of applying the remedy of deflation in full doses to its own affairs. Through liquidation of some houses and through mergers among others, the number of active commission firms is being reduced very sharply.

It may be surprising to many to learn that a number of old-established, conservative Wall Street houses welcome warmly this deflation process. They believe it will inaugurate a prosperous and stable era for their business. Not a few veteran commission house men regarded dubiously the enormous expansion of the brokerage business before 1930, with the entry into the field of numerous new houses and many inadequately trained persons. Attraction to the market of hosts of uniformed speculators, they felt, would certainly prove a temporary phenomenon which would cause trouble later, even though it yielded large profits to brokerage houses for a time.

Now, through the merger process, competition is on the wane. Also, the new combined organizations are in the main well diversified, with many doing commodity as well as a general stock brokerage business.

Strong, Conservative Houses Capture Profitable Business.

The strong, conservative house, able to draw upon speculative, investment and institutional sources for security orders, and having a commodity department, too, is ready for inactive as well as active trading periods. As a result, a more stable and, in the long run, probably a more profitable business than had been available through the rapid fluctuations of the boom and deflation periods of the past should be enjoyed by these houses.

Also, many of these commission houses do not frown upon those features of the securities exchange act which provide for regulation of specialists and floor traders by the Securities Exchange Commission. There has long been an underlying antagonism, officially denied, between the commission houses that do business with the public, organized in the Association of Stock Exchange Firms, and the several hundred exchange members engaged exclusively on the floor as specialists or otherwise. The latter group has contended that its services are so vital that it should be unregulated. Many commission house brokers, however, claim that, despite their relatively small overhead expenses, these floor brokers have tended to absorb an unusually large proportion of the earnings arising from the execution of public security orders. Also, the large number of exchange seats held by noncommission house members has tended to give specialists and other brokers' brokers a dominating voice in the election of officers of the exchange. The commisson houses as a result, while unwilling to give public voice to such sentiments because of the likely effect of legislation, feel that the Securities Exchange Commission can perform the job of regulating specialists better than can the exchange itself.

Bond Market Is Unchanged At 84.4 Level

Firmness of Federals Aids Prices; Trading Rises to $12,751,000.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—The firmness of United States Government securities acted as a steadying influence on the bond market today, although some of the utilities and secondary rails still exhibited a rather heavy undertone.

Transfers totaled $12,751,000, par value, against $12,367,000 yesterday. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate issues was unchanged at 84.4.

The better tendencies displayed by the Federal list was attributed partly to the President's pronouncements on forthcoming social legislagtion which, he indicated, would not include "fantastic" proposals.

Roosevelt's Remarks Interpreted.

The financial district interpreted the Chief Executive's remarks to mean that some of the talked-of reforms would be postponed until after economic recovery has been assured.

Gains in the Government section ranged from 1-32d to 8-32ds of a point, with the guaranteed Federal Farm Mortgage and Home Owners Loan bonds showing considerable activity. The turnover in this department amounted to $3,040,000 compared with $2,120,000 Wednesday.

Loans of Consolidated Gas, previously heavy in reflection of the renewed campaign for lower rates, held to a narrow range. American Telephone issues also did not appear especially perturbed over the order of the Communications Commission for an investigation of this corporation's contract with the Bell system.

Number of Advances.

There were a number of advances of a point or more in the corporate groups. Among these were American International 5½s, at 84½; Canadian Pacific 4½s, at 95 ¼; Certain-Teed 5½s, at 68¾; St. Paul 5s, at 21¾; Container 5s, at 73¼; General Public Service 5½s, at 90; Goodrich 6s, at 85¼; Great Northern 4½s, at 72; International Paper 6s, at 55; Paramount 5½s, at 58½; Studebaker 6s, at 47; Texas & Pacific 5s, at 85, and Wheeling Steel 4½s, at 86.

Bonds off 1 to 2 points included some of Utilities Power & Light, Rio Grande Western, Portland General Electric, North American Edison, N. Y. Western & Boston, New Haven and Chicago & Northwestern.

Curb's Prices Turn Mixed In Late Sales

Selling Depresses Metals as Transfers Jump to 212,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—The curb market churned about a good deal today without being able to get far in any direction. Late selling in metals exerted a depressing effect on the list following forenoon improvement. Closing prices were irregular.

The volume was the largest in some time, transfers approximating 212,000 shares compared with 199,000 yesterday.

Utilities held to a narrow course. Alcohols largely canceled their early fractional advances while oils were narrow. A number of specialties finished firm.

Singer Manufacturing canceled the 4-point gain it registered yesterday. Lake Shore ended 1½ lower. Bunker Hill & Sullivan and Wright Hargreaves declined fractionally. Aluminum Co. of America, American Gas & Electric, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Sherwin Williams, Swift Internacionale and Swift & Co. were all about even on final quotations while Parker Rust Proof, Safety Car Heating, Great Atlantic & Pacific and R. C. Williams were firm spots.

Among petroleum issues, Creola was up a shade while International Petroleum eased as much. Standard Oil of Kentucky was fairly active at a small advance.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—A rush of buying on the stock exchange today caused gilt-edged securities to continue their record-breaking activity. Consols sold at £92¼, the highest point in 30 years, while the 3½ per cent war loan reached a new high of £109½. Both issues closed below their best for the season. A shortage of these securities sent much money into the industrial sections, wherein prices advanced. Gold-mining shares and foreign bonds held steady, but oil and rubber stocks eased. The market closed uncertainly.

Paris—With the exception of rentes and gold-mining shares, prices on the bourse today opened heavy under the influence of the continued weakness in Brussels. Prices strengthened toward the end, and the closing was firm.

Berlin—More favorable trade reports did not affect prices on the boerse today, which were unsettled and lower. The closing was very quiet.

Bank of England.

London, Nov. 15 (AP).—The weekly statement of the Bank of England shows the following changes (in pounds): Total reserve increased 1,004,000; circulation increased 911,000; bullion decreased 8,000; other securities increased 224,000; public deposits increased 10,946,000; other deposits decreased 10,590,000; notes reserve increased 911,000; government securities decreased 752,000.

The proportion of the bank's reserve to liability is 47.41 per cent, compared with 46.93 last week.

Rate of discount, 2 per cent.

Wheat Bounds Upward Under Buying Drive

Cotton Prices Increase Slightly After an Early Drop.

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP).—Wheat bounded upward in spirited fashion late today, converting early losses into maximum overnight gains of 2⅛ cents a bushel.

Undoing of spreads between wheat and corn, with wheat being bought in the process, appeared to be largely responsible for a sudden change of the market trend. Some observers said unfavorable wheat crop news from the Southern Hemisphere and war rumors in the Balkans had a bullish effect.

Wheat closed nervous at some setback from the day's top, but 1¼ to 1⅝ above yesterday's finish; May, 1.00⅜ to 1.00½; corn, ⅝ to 1⅝ advanced; May, 83⅞ to 84; oats, ⅜ to ¾ up, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 2 cents.

Brisk enlargement of speculative demand for wheat developed after the fact grew apparent that the Chicago market had become nearly bare of offerings. Something of a rally in final quotations for wheat at Liverpool preceded the upturn of prices here.

Cotton Market

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—A slight opening decline was followed by rallies in cotton today, but after selling up from 12.31 to 12.41 for March deliveries, the market eased off under Southern selling and realizing. March closed at 12.39 with the general market steady, net 3 points higher to 1 point lower.

Overnight selling from the South was absorbed by local buying on the relatively firm showing of Liverpool and the market soon turned steadier on covering combined with a modern trade demand.

A considerable part of the business again seemed to be connected with the evening up of December and switching of near months. Trade interests continued to buy the near positions. Trading was quiet during the middle of the day, but was fairly active early.

Nothing more definite was heard as to acreage prospects for next year and no change was reported in the general spot situation. Exports today, 34,923, making 1,654,741 so far this season. Port receipts, 32,470. U. S. port stocks, 3,153,095.

Queries Find Blue Eagle in Good Standing

Fair Trade Practices Win Wide Favor Among 125 Editors.

By Frederick Gardner.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—The Blue Eagle, insofar as it makes for fair trade practices, still commands wide favor from American industry.

This was the consensus of 125 editors of business and trade publications, queried on the operations of the codes. Replies indicated that most industries had profited by the fair trade rules, were enforcement machinery was effective.

Hankering For Set Prices.

Only rock products, coal, jewelry and dry goods industries disclosed a hankering for set prices in the future, the summary indicated.

The poll of industrial opinion on New Deal policies was taken through editors of the 125 member publications of Associated Business Papers, Inc. They were described as thoroughly familiar with the inside facts and opinions in the industries they follow. Nearly every field of business was covered.

Fair trade practices, they learned, had functioned well in the fields of cement, rock products, architecture, food packing, electrical contracting, copper, jewelry, coal, steel and bus transportation.

Sharper teeth in regulations were declared necessary for enforcement of fair dealings in sporting goods, textiles, shoes, dry goods, restaurants, chemical plants, electrical manufacturing and in laundries, except where State codes applied.

Codes Need Longer Trial.

Textile editors thought NRA codes needed a longer trial. They explained evasions under the regulations had been easy.

In the power industry, editors asserted there was better mutual understanding but that executive attention had been diverted from sales toward Washington and politics.

Editors noted the copper code had prevented ruthless competition but that railroads had "taken advantage of the bus codes and cut passenger rates, creating losses they want shippers to pay in the form of higher freight rates." The general effect of fair trade practices in coal was termed "highly beneficial."

Exports of Paint Steady.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP).—Exports of paint and paint products from the United States have maintained satisfactory levels since the beginning of 1934, reports the chemical division of the Department of Commerce. Nearly all principal items, says the survey, show increases in quantity and value over the corresponding period of last year.

DICK TRACY In the Bag

Speaking of Life.

"Life is such a beastly mess, full trouble and distress," said the man of unshed tears, full of doleful doubts aid fears. At the soda fount he stood, in a dark and bitter mood, and he lectured for a time on this life, which is a crime. "Life's a thing of hopeless gloom, all our hopes go up the flume; men are false and women frail, and our friends are all in jail. Man's a traveling hotel for the germs that in him dwell, microbes pink and green and brown—soon or late they'll drag him down. We're too lean or else too fat, all our tires are running flat; nothing's stable, nothing's sure, we have ills that have no cure. Life is but a bitter frost and is never worth the cost. For long years I've looked around, only trouble have I found; only worry and despair, only grief and carking care." "You would have a brighter view if you'd take a pill or two," said the druggist, as he poured something sparkling from a gourd. "Gloomy pessimists abound who keep pawing up ground, finding fault with this bright vale where we mortals keep the trail. They would know some pleasant thrills if they'd take my liver pills; then at last they'd realize sunlit fields and azure skies, singing birds and flowers in bloom, and shake off their load of gloom Pessimism always springs from dyspepsia and such things. If you'd see the world aglow with a light you do not know, if you'd see the world transformed, by the golden sunshine warmed, see the rainbow o'er the hills, take my well-known liver pills."
